MHIER, THE HUNTER

Long years ago when the fairies still used their power there lived a young ing and not without wit, but the poor ing and not without wit, but the poor fellow had one misfortune. He never succeeded when he went out hunting, and yet he obstinately persisted in hunting all the same.

That was a rare thing among com-

What was a rare thing among comnon people at that time, Lohier had a mon people as that time, Lohier had a metty home of his own—the gift of a generous lord, whose life he had saved. It was made up of a cottage beside a little pool full of fish, a few acres of land and a moor, where, doubtless there was plenty of game under the broom and the briers. This moorland was the torment of the poor man's life. It was in vain that he set out at the break of day, his rifle on his arm, and his dog, Pataud, at his heels, to beat the bushes until at his needs, to beat the bushes until evening. Rabbits and hares slipped away between his feet, while the partridges and the little birds flew up before him without hurrying, as if they

new his ill luck.
There is no need to say that the people of the village laughed loudly when bey met Lohier with his empty game sel and Pataud lowering his ears. But then he came home the unfortunate hunter had the same reception. His wife, Paulette, overwhelmed him with

Usually Lohier bore it all with good grace and was only bent the more on going hunting. However, one evening he came back in a bad humor, after having spent in rain his whole provision of powder. He found at the cottage his cousin William, who was waiting for him with all his mates to ask him to his wedding. After the first compliments, Paulette brought at a jug of cider which put every one in a good humor. "See here, William," cried Lohier. while they were drinking each other's healths. "What present do you wish me to make you for your marriage?" His cousin answered, jokingly: "Oh, 'm not hard to please. Just bring me a w fine pieces of game for the wedding reakfast. That will be easy for a huntr like you. " This displeased Lohier, who became ite angry as he saw the other smilng. So, striking the table a heavy blow with his fist, he said: "Don't you believe that if I wished to take the trouble should be as good a hunter as any of

"Prove it, then," answered the young man, who were much amused at his

"That's easy enough," retorted the imprudent Lohier, carried away by self love, "If after two days I do not bring on six rabbits and 12 partridges shot with my own hand, I will give you my house and property without any condi-

"Agreed!" they all cried. And the young men came one after another to take the open hand of Lohier as a sign of the agreement. Then they all went Paulette laughed no longer. As soon s William and his companions had disappeared she filled the house with her amentations and overwhelmed her hushand with her reproaches. "Do you wish to have us ruined?" she said, weepng. "After two days we shall be beggars without a roof to our heads, for you are too clumsy to win this wretched Lohier answered sharply, though at heart he trembled, asking himself how eshould get out of this evil plight. With the morning he set forth, accompanied by his faithful Pataud, who said plainly in the language of dogs, "Here we go again to miss our game." The first day's results showed that the vise Pataud was right. Not an animal with fur or feathers had been touched by the shots of Lohier. He did not dare o back to the house, where nothing waited him but the complaints and reroaches of Paulette.

"My poor comrade," he said to his og as he shared with him the remainer of his bread, "I think we shall have eget used to poverty. Tomorrow I shall ertainly have lost the property which I isked so foolishly."

When he had finished his frugal meal, he fresh water of a spring bubbling up rom a gray rock allowed him to refresh himself. Then he stretched himself out adly on the briers, where sleep did not lelay finding him.

It was near midnight when the hunter wakened with a start. He was stupeled at the sight before him. In the midst of deep darkness, for the moon id not shine that night, the gray rock ad grown luminous, while the water of the spring, sometimes blue and someimes rose color, seemed to sparkle with sapphires and rubies. Lohier remembered that the old men of the country called this "the fairies' rock," because, they said, those mysterious beings held council there. An idea suddenly entered his mind, and he cried out with a oud voice:

"Fairy of the briers, have pity on a wretched man! Help me to kill tomorrow the six hares and the 12 partridges which will permit me to keep my home. It seemed to him that a voice of crystal mingled with the murmur of thespring and repeated softly:

"Six hares and 12 partridges?"" "Yes, yes; nothing but that," he anwered. "I shall owe you more than life

A beautiful flame, brilliant as a diamond, escaped from the summit of the nck, which became dark and gray once

"It is the fairy who has gone away," thought Lohier, full of hope, and he turned over and slept again. de was afraid he had simply dreamed. But scarcely had he loaded his rifle to begin the hunt when from every point of the moorland there came toward him in crowds rabbits, partridges, pheasants, quail and snipe. Soon the little open space in the midst of which the gray lock rose was so filled that Lobier had scarcely room to stand.

Crazy with joy, he began firing into this crowd of animals. Every one of his shots brought down five or six pieces of game. But Lohier, who had never seen such luck, shot without tiring himself until Patand was the only living being near him. He left the brave dog to guard his treasure and ran home out of breath. "We are saved," he cried to Paulette. "Give me our donkey, with our biggest

The morning was hardly long enough for him to carry away his booty, although the poor donkey went back and forth each time with a heavier load. When William and his friends came into the yard, Lohler was finishing the unloading of the last pannier. At the sight of this great heap of game, the mischievous smiles which had been on their lips changed to open mouthed astonishment. They stood there, their arms hanging down, looking at each other and not knowing what to say.

Lohier, beside himself with joy, rubbed his hands and laughed with all his heart. He felt himself happier than a king, when his friends, recovering from their astonishment, gave him their warmest compliments. The hares were so fine! The partridges so fat! The pheasants and small game in such good state! They all began feeling of the game with their hands.

Oh, what a surprise! The little dwellers of the moorland all jumped to their feet at once. The hares began to run, the partridges and the other birds to fly in every direction and in such confusion that the witnesses of the scene knew not what had become of them. At last the game had all disappeared, and the voice of crystal, which Lohier had already heard, pronounced these words:

"Friend Lohier, remember that by the gray rock you asked me only for six hares and 12 partridges. You have killed without mercy all these poor guests of my moorland. I give them back their life and leave you a counsel -you must not abuse your opportunities." A light, rosy cloud, followed by a bright flame, showed the departure of

It was now the turn of William and his companions'to laugh long and loud. But finally, seeing the pitiful air of poor Lohier, William came forward with outstretched hand.

"Cousin," he said, "we give you back your word. Our bet was only a joke. None of us would take his property away from a brave fellow like you. But let me add a counsel to the one you have already received: You must never promise to do what is above your strength."

"Thanks, William, to yourself and to all of you, my friends," answered Lohier. "I have been an imprudent and a vain man. I shall probably be all my life long the clumsiest hunter of the country. But I now know a way of getting good from it. From today you may hunt freely on my ground. I shall be as pleased with your luck as if it were my

Strange to say, from the day when Lohier showed himself so generous and simple in acknowledging where he was wrong, he had good luck in hunting. He seldom went through the moorland in the company of his friends without bringing back a well filled gamebag.-Philadelphia Press.

How They Shoot the Nile Rapids. Arab boys are expert swimmers, and, like boys in general, are fond of displaying their skill before strangers if only they are rewarded by some small coin. Mr. Eden tells how they shoot the rapids of the Nile.

Seating themselves astride of a log of wood about six feet long and buoyant enough to support them waist high out of the water, they ride it with the seat and gestures of a jockey, and with both ds and feet keep line of the current.

The fall is shot with an ease and grace that does away with the sense of danger one would expect to feel at seeing a man hurried along amid such a boil and turmoil of waters, but once at the bottom they have a hard struggle to induce their horses to turn out of the

To do this they avail themselves of the impetus acquired by the log in its shoot, and throwing themselves full length upon it they seem, with a sudden stroke from the left leg and arm, to drive it and themselves out of the curwith confidence, taking the fish from the fingers and swallowing it with a smack. Sometimes a minnow escapes from the fingers or from the fish that is trying to take it and darts away for safety, with two or three blackfish, sometimes more, after it. The little minnow sticks close to the edge of the pool and to the surface of the water. It is thus protected on one side by the wall of the pool, and at the surface it can swim faster than its pursuers, and being so much smaller it can turn much quicker than the blackfish. It may go half the length of the pool, hugging the wall, and then dart across the pool at right angles, with the big blackfish still after it. So long as the minnow keeps to the top it is safe, but if it goes to the bottom the chances are greatly against it. In deep-

man who so terribly avenged his domestic dishonor. The tragedy is one of the most sensational in the history of the State on accoant of the prominence of the persons involved and the circumstances surrounding the case. It occurred at 12.35 o'clock in an evil resort kept by a colored woman at 1025 West Madison street. Brown was killed in the room, and Mrs.

Gordon was shot as she was fleeing, from the place. At noon Brown, with Gordon's wife knocked at the front door of the house. They were admitted and immediately repaired to the upstairs front room, which had been previously engaged. Thirty minutes later a tall, dark-haired man knocked at the door of the house and was admitted. He engaged the front lower room, saying that a woman would join him there shortly. The man closed all the doors and a few minutes later a commotion was heard above, followed operate in the city and the remaining two in the county. They say they are opposed to polygamy and that there is by a succession of pistol shots. Then there was a hurried movement down stairs as Mrs. Gordon fled from the scene A lew more shots rang out and she fell dend on the porch in the rear yard. Gordon left the house immediately. A few moments later Brown's corpse was found in the up-stairs room,

The following telegram was taken from his pocket: "Louisville, Ky., April 28,-Archie D. Brown, Governor's private secretary, Frankfort, Ky .- Don't write any more. Come Tuesday. Meet me at S. 10 a. m.

It was pursuant to this telegram that Brown met Mrs. Gordon this morning. It was a brief but sanguinary battle that was fought in the front room of the second floor of Lucie Smith's house. As soon as Gordon gained admittance a duel to the death evidently began. Brown had a 38 calibre revolver, which was found empty after the tragedy. Six bullets pierced Brown's body, and three that of Mrs. Gordon. The bed on which Brown and Mrs.

Gordon lay was covered with blood, showing that one or both had been shot while there, or in the struggle one or more of the wounded had fallen on the

Gordon said to Officer Lapaille on the way to jail that he had suspected the couple for some time and about a week ago he found that his suspicions were correct. He went to the house this morning and found them in the same bed. He drew his pistol and fired five shots at Brown, by which time the Governor's son had his own pistol in play. Brown fired two shots at Gordon. Then the latter grappled with him and took his pistol away from him and shot at him with his own weapon. After shooting at Brown he shot at his wife as she was going down the steps, striking her just as she reached the bottom. She fell dead outside the door. Brown,s body lay on the floor of the room in which he was killed until 2 o'clock when it was removed by Undertaker King. The body presented a norrible appearance, being covered with blood from head to foot

There was no clothing on the body except a pair of drawers and a pair of socks. There were three gunshot wounds in the reast, one of them being over the region of the heart, two wounds [in the flead, one being in the centre of the forehead There was another in the centre of the stomach antoher in the right arm. Mrs. Gordon was lying on a cellar door n the yard, face downward. She was clothed only in n chemise and was in stocking feet. Her bair was loose and was hanging in a tangled mass. Mattie Mattingly, the colored woman, says that Brown and Mrs. Gordon had been accustomed to visit the house on Sunday of each week for some time. Mrs. Gordon was Miss Nellie Bush, of this city. Her family is one of the most prominent in this State. Her mother was once State Librarian and her grandfather was Judge Zachariah Wheat, Chief Justice of the Court of Appeals of Kentucky. The coroner held an inquest over the bodies this afternoon, and the jury rendered a verdict of justifiable homicide. It is understood, however, that Gordon will be held for a formal preliminary examination.

A MODEL WIFE.

She Had a Good Deal to Try Her, but She Wouldn't Get Angry.

The best natured woman in the world resides in the city of Austin. She has been married a number of years to a man named Peterby, who is one of the most disagreeable, quarrelsome men outside of the Texas legislature. And yet Mr. and Mrs. Peterby have never had a quarrel, for the reason that it is LOUISVILLE, KY., April 80 .- A bloody impossible to make her angry. He has scowled at her and occasionally wafted a chair at her, just to see if she wouldn't get angry, but he suffered disappointment in each and every instance. Peterby had been bragging to his friends about what a good natured wife he has, and Gilhooly offered to bet $50 that if Peterby were to go home, raise a fuss and pull the tablecloth full of dishes off the table she would show signs of temper. He had tried that with his wife once, but he never repeated the experiment. Peterby said he didn't want to rob a friend of his money, but he knew he could win. At last he made the bet. The friend was to watch the proceedings through a window. Peterby came home apparently fighting drunk. She saw him coming, went out to the gate, opened it, kissed him and assisted his tottering steps into the house. He sat down hard in the middle of the floor and

"Confound your ugly picture, what did you pull that chair from under me

"I hope you did not hurt yourself?" she replied, smiling kindly. "I was to blame for it. I am so awkward. But I'll try and not do it again if you will forgive me this time." And she helped him to his feet, although she had nothing to do with his falling. He then sat on the sofa, and sliding off on the floor abused her like a pickpocket for lifting up the other end of the sofa. She said she was sorry and finally led him to the supper table. He threw a plate at her, but she dodged it and asked him if he would take tea or coffee. Then the brute seized the tablecloth, sat down on the floor and pulled the dishes and everything over him in one grand crash. Some women might have lost their temper, but not so with Mrs. Peterby. She did not blubber like a child; she did not even sulk or pout. With a pleasant smile, she said: "Well, George, this is a new idea. We have been married 10 years and never eaten our supper on the floor. Won't it be fun! Just like those picnics we used to go to before we were married," and then the angelic woman deliberately sat down on the floor alongside of the wretch, arranged the dishes and fixed him up a nice supper. This broke him up. He owned up he was only fooling her and offered to give her $50 to get herself a new dress with. She took the money and bought him a new suit of clothes and a box of cigars with it. Heaven will have to be repaired and whitewashed before it is fit for that kind of a woman. - Tammany Times.

Was Shylock a Jew? Eleven different versions of the pound of flesh story exist in the early literaed on a historical basis, have one related by the biographer of Pope Sixtus V. The original tale runs as follows: Simon Cenada, a Jew, enters into a wager with Sechi, a Christian, staking a pound of his flesh against a large sum of money of the Christian. The Jew loses the wager, and Sechi insists on his forfeit. The case is referred to the governor of the city, who, in turn, places it before the pope, who condemns both to lifelong imprisonment, from which they are finally released on the payment of a heavy fine. An Italian, Giovanni Florentino, in the sixteenth century, was the first to change the roles of the Jew and Christian, and in this altered form the bard of Avon found the story. The poet himself could scarcely have known any Jews personally, since they were expelled from England 300 years before his time and were not readmitted until after his death. From stage presentations, from descriptions in books or from popular reports, which were always derogatory to the Jewish character, the poet derived his knowledge of the Jew.

—Menorah. Saving Fund Versus Bank. The New York Recorder tells a story of a young man who was induced to join a loan association, although somewhat skeptical of their merits. He resolved as a test to put by $10 a month in the loan association and a similar sum each month in a sayings bank. At the end of 10 years he balanced his cash and found that he had $1,800 to his credit in the association and only $1 in the bank. This is accounted for by two circumstances, one being the dread of fines if delinquent in the association, the other being that the book value of his association stock was always so far ahead of the savings bank account that when he wished to expend any money he found it much less expensive to draw it out of the bank, hence would not disturb his
