A COLORADO STORY.

WHY THE RIVER AT TRINIDAD BEARS THREE NAMES.

A Queer Kink In Nomenclature Explained by a Rocky Mountain Editor-The Romance of the Lost Mexican Soldiers Who Were Bound For St. Augustine.

"Some queer kinks in nomenclature are discoverable in this country of ours," said Colonel William Stapleton of Trinidad, Colo, "Running right through the town of Trinidad, in which I live, is a little river, which familiarly and indiscriminately does its muddy, flowing business under three names. It is called variously the Las Animas, the Purgatorio and the Picket Wire. The names came about in this way:

"Santa Fe claims to be and is about the same age as St. Augustine, Fla. Both towns are considerably over 300 years old, although I forget the exact date of their settlement. "Back in the middle of the sixteenth century the Spaniards at Santa Fe made up a military detachment to go overland to St. Augustine. The old dons didn't know anything of the country which lay between. All they were posted on was the distance and the general direction, as they knew the latitude and longitude of both places. Rather late in the fall some 700 of them, steel clad soldiers, camp followers, baggage train and women, pushed in through the Raton pass over the trail now followed by the Santa Fe railroad, and at the beginning of winter made a camp at what is now the site of Trinidad, which sits fairly in the mouth of the Raton canyon, looking out on the plains. "There they were on the very threshold of the Rockies. To the east of them, over which their course must trend, lay an utter waste of plains, apparently without limit. All that winter the Spaniards camped in the mouth of the Raton canyon. With wine, woman and song, they put in a hilarious time, and probably had as much fun as they ever had before or since. Winters are not rigorous and spring comes early in the vicinity of Trinidad.

With the first coming of the early grass the adventurers banished their armor, fitted up their houses and got ready to move. The camp followers, the women and the extra baggage they sent back to Santa Fe. When last seen, the party bound for St. Augustine, numbering several hundreds, were marching down the valley of the little river by which they had camped

"That was the last ever heard of them. Not a feather ever floated back to tell the story of their fate. With the last flap of the last banner and the latest sun glint on the rearmost steel cap they disappeared from the earth. To this day no one is able to make a suggestion even as to what became of them, except that it is supposed they were butchered by the Indians.

"Fifty years ago there was an old Comanche chief named Iron Shirt, because of a rusty old shirt of chain mail which he wore, but neither he nor any of the other Comanches knew anything of the origin of the garment nor where it came from. It had been in the tribe further than the short Comanche memory could reach. Many have supposed that it was a relic of this Spanish expedition of three centuries ago, which had apparently marched off the earth that faraway spring day in the mouth of the Raten canyon.

"But now for the kink in nomenclature I was thinking of. The disappearance of these Spanish soldiers seemed so eerie and witchlike that it made a profound impression on the superstitious people they had left behind. They named the little river Rio de Las Animas, meaning the River of the Lost Souls, and it is supposed to hold the story of the expedition's dark fate and repeat it to itself in the river language, which the Mexicans do not pretend to understand.

"When the French fur traders under Sublette and St. Vrain came trapping in those waters from St. Louis, in a French effort at translation they made out that the River of the Lost Souls must mean the Purgatory river, and so gave the river its translated name of Purgatorio.

"Later, when the American bull whacker marched through on his way to Santa Fe, he accepted the French name, but called it the Picket Wire. To this day the river wears all three titles, as the reader would soon learn by turning to the Trinidad newspapers, where he would find cattle brands advertised as having their ranges variously on the Las Animas, the Purgatorio and the Picket Wire.

"Every man picks out his name for himself, but they all mean the same river. It isn't much of a river either, only about 20 feet wide at Trinidad. The Mexicans, however, loyally stick to the name of Rio de Las Animas, and Mexicun mothers tell their children of the soldiers who, hundreds of years ago, marched from there and were never heard of again."-Washington but Do Not Tell Its Story.

Point Barrow, Alaska, the northernmost point of land of the North American continent, has some interesting graveyards of its own. About 11 years ago Lieutenant Ray, in his report of the polar expedition to Point Barrow, recorded that in digging a shaft 26 feet selow the earth's surface to obtain earth temperatures he found a pair of wooden goggles, pointing to the great lapse of time since these shores were first peopled. The Alaska Mining Record says that this country was undoubt-

tribution of the race today marks the routes traveled. The seashore led them along the coasts of Labrador and Greenland, Hudson bay and its tributary waters. They came down the Yukon, so rich in minerals, to people the shores of that stream and the interior of Alaska,

and traveled along the coast to Cape

Prince of Wales. To this day they use dogs instead of deer, the natives of North America having never domesticated the reindeer, and they speak a different tongue from their neighbors

Some writers on the subject have advanced the theory that the natives of Alaska are descendants of the race of people that Cortes drove out of Mexico, others that they are Japanese or Chinese in origin, and others still that they came to this country across the strait from Siberia. So far as definite information is concerned, one guess is as good as another. The lonely mounds at Point Barrow mark the antiquity of the race, but they do not tell its story.

abounds in legends, but none gives any data by which to judge how long these desolate shores have been inhabited. The ruins of ancient villages and winter huts along the seashore and in the interior show that the country has been inhabited for centuries. There are mounds at Point Barrow marking the site of three huts dating back to the time when the natives had no iron and the men "talked like dog." These mounds stand in the middle of a marsh, and the sinking of the land caused the site to be flooded and abandoned. Cheerfully would he have put aside his enthusiasm in the cause of science and cast the reptile from him, but that he could not do. The rattler's tail was coiled tightly about his leg, and if the man had loosed his hold upon the neck and middle of the reptile its fangs would have made their deadly mark upon him while yet the coil was unbroken. His life depended upon his reaching the hotel before the strength in his arms gave out, and how much strength he had left he knew not, for the numbness in them had driven out the sense of feeling. BUT IT WAS A CLOSE CALL FOR THE SCIENTIFIC GENTLEMAN.

He Picked Up a Frozen Rattler, Which Thawed Out as He Carried It In the Hot August Sun-Florida Snake Sharps Astounded at the Deed.

"I was once on a gunning trip during the month of August in the hammocks along the lower St. Johns river. I came to a hotel on the river bank that was keeping open for the little business brought to it by the river traffic. Back of the hotel was a fringe of pines, and beyond the pines was a reach of barren country covered with a growth of blue palmetto and gallberry.

"Among the persons staying at the hotel were two young men whose interest in the region centered in those things which pertained to natural history. Both were well dressed. Their hands were white and smooth. In town they might have been taken for bank tellers. One morning, before the sun had taken the chill out of the air, one of these guests, in a pair of rather genteel top boots, wandered for a considerable distance through the low palmetto scrub. In his path he found a rattlesnake twice as long as the orange wood

"The chill of the night air was still in the marrow of the reptile, and it was an easy matter for the young naturalist to clutch the snake just back of his jaws and hold him in a firm grasp with the thumb and circling forefinger of the right hand. Carefully lifting the body of the snake with the left hand the naturalist started for the hotel with his greatly valued prize, carrying his orange wood cane under his left arm.

"There is nothing else that so warms the cockles of a rattlesnake's heart as the vertical rays of the sun, and before the young naturalist had made half the journey to the hotel, the captive snake had managed, unobserved, to twist his tail about his captor's thigh. Thus anchored, he gave an ablebodied pull, which was the naturalist's first intimation that the snake was putting off his sluggishness. With his left hand the man was about to unwind the coil from his thigh, but he found that if he let go the snake at its middle the muscle of the reptile would be too much for the right hand grasp at its throat, which was the only safeguard against a stroke from its deadly fangs. So he tightened his grasp upon the neck and quickened his pace toward the hotel.

"It must have seemed an endless jour ney to the young naturalist as he hurried along, his eyes fixed upon the writhing monster, except when they were raised for an instant to glance at the flag hanging above the hotel; but at last be was within the grounds. His friend rushed forward from the little group on the veranda, but turned and ran back when he saw the look on the young naturalist's face. In a moment he appeared with a strong cord and a cane, which he had caught up in the hallway. While he was tying a slip noose in the cord neither of the men spoke, but it was easy to see that both knew there

There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condi-tion of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore ill important, in order to get its beneeffects, to note when you pur chase, that you have the genuine arti-cle, which is manufactured by the Cali-fornia Fig Syrup Co. only and sold by

The cause of the tracedy dates back months. On the night of July 4th, Miss Sadie Seaman, the daughter and sister of the dying men, who had been receiving attentions from Isaac Bangston, returned late from an entertainment which had been given at the house of a neighbor. The young woman went to her room to retire and soon after she entered Bangston came out of a closet in which he had been concealed. Miss Seaman screamed and Bangston ran down stairs. The parents of the girl, attracted by the outery, saw Bangston hurriedly leave the house with a pistol in his hand. He made his escape and was not heard of until last September, when he surrendered to the authorities and was indicted for attempting burglary, assault with intent to kill and attempted rape The foud between the families and friends of Seaman and Bangston has been kept up ever since. but there was

THE CUBA RESOLUTIONS.

Another Conference Without Agreement-Believed that the House Will Ustimately Accept the Senate Besolutions.

By Telegraph to the Morning Star, WASHINGTON, March 25 .- After a session of an hour this afternoon, the conferees on the Cuban resolutions adourned until to-morrow without reaching a conclusion. The drift of the discussion showed, however, that there was a firm intention on the part of the committee to report resolutions that would meet the approval of both Houses. There appears to be a more favorable feeling toward the Senate resolutions this afternoon, it having been made plain to the managers on the part of the Honse that the House resolutions could not pass the Senate. It is believed that ultimately the House will accept the Senate resolutions. The conferees hope to settle the matter finally to-morrow. Senator Lodge, who is a member of the conference, left here this evening for Boston and will not return until Monday

When the matter of accepting the Senate resolutions was being discussed one member of the committee took the ground that this Government had no right to ask another Government to recognize the independence of one of its colonies which was in insurrection, and it was insisted that this would be a casus belli. In answer to this it was shown that when the Cubans were in insurrection before, our minister to Spain, Gen. Dan. Sicke's, was instructed to exercise his good offices to secure such a recognition at the hands of Spain, and that at that time Spain took no offence at the action. Everything considered, there appears to be a desire to accept the Senate resolutions, and if this is done, there is no doubt but that the House would agree to such a report. The condition of affairs in the Senate was discussed this afternoon very frankly. It was made plain that there was a small minority, headed by Senator Hale, that did not propose to permit the Cuban resolutions to ever come to a vote if they could prevent it. In fact the Committee on Foreign Relations had been warned that a quiet but effective system of filibustering had been inaugurated with a view to preventing a vote on the question in the Senate. For this reason the House conferees were urged to accept the Senate resolutions, which would remove the debate from the Senate to the House, where the filibustering could not under the rules be engaged in. It is believed to be the most probable outcome of the conference and would not surprise the members of the House to-morrow if the House managers receded from the House resolutions and accepted those originally passed by the
