SAVED BY A SQUAW.

I regret that the heroine of this story did not have a more romantic or musical name than "Gumboots Jane." Had it been Faunfoot or Stareyes it would have been more pleasing to romantic people, and the imagination might more easily picture her as a "maiden of the forest," worthy of companionship with those fair creatures met with in the writings of J. Fenimore Cooper and -other regulation frontier stories. But as I am simply giving a sketch from real life I must take the names and characters as I found them.

Truth also compels me to state that she was no great beauty, a fact I the more deeply deplore because all other heroines met with in Indian stories, from the lovely daughter of Powhatan up to the present time, so far as I know, were without exception perfect paragona of native grace and loveliness.

The heroine of this story appeared at French Bar, a mining camp on the Stickeen river, one day in the stmmer of 1881. She wore a pair of rabber boots much too large for her, and as her skirts were rather short they were quite conspienous. Now, miners have a way of readily coining nicknames for those with whom they come in contact, and as if by common' consent she was at once. called "Gumboots Jane." The rest of her apparel consisted of a waist improvised from a man's blue woolen shirt. a skirt of some kind of brown materia a cheap shawl and a rather dirty looking silk handkerehief tied over her head. The girl was about 16 years old, and although no beauty; she was not positively ugly. She had a pleasant face, a well formed mouth and pretty white reath, which she seemed to like to show when she smiled. But her eyes were the anost attractive of her features. They were large, dark and dreamy, and shone with a soft light that made them almost beantiful. The Indians of southeastern Alaska and British Columbia are far different from those of other parts of North America in disposition and habits of life. They are infelligent, vivacious, in-"strions and very sociable. They have to little of the stoicism and vagrant of the tribes of the western plains mily adopt our habits of life.and myn fichers. By hunting fur bearing winnals and working in the mines and fisheries they make a good deal of money. They also conduct quite a prof-Hable trade in curies with tourists who visit this "land of the midnight sun" in enhance. When out hunting or at work, of course, they wear rough clothing, but when visiting with each other at neighboring villages, participating in the festivities of their frequent dances and "mathaches," or attending church on Sundays, they dress about as well as the white people. Frough Bar is situated in British territory at the intersection of the Stickeen river and Beaver creek, not far from Telegraph creek, which is the head of steamboat navigation for miners and applies going into the celebrated Cassiar mining district. The "pay dirt" there was neither extensive nor rich, and as the time of which I am writing the camp contained only 16 mer. As it rained frequently during that season and was always cool of nights they lived in snug little log cabins, making a village just at the month of Beaver creek anyon. Two miners occupied a cabin together and owned and worked their claim as equal partners, affectionately calling each other "pards." They subsisted from a common supply of provisions, took regular turns at cooking and doing their chores and slept in the same bunk. Dan Nolan was a member of the camp that summer. He was young and boyish holding, but his manly demeanor, his ready wit, industrious habits and acommodating disposition made him a great favorite with his companions. He was brought up in Dublin and considered that city his home, as his mothd only sister, to whom he sent part wh month's earnings, still lived course he was not called Dan Noan, for miners find nicknames for their favorites as well as for others, and though not selected with any regard for asthetics or cuphony they are generally expressive and often very appropriate. So Dan was known by the more alliterative name of "Dublin Dan." His pard was called "Joaquin" Jones. When he first came to the Bar, he said his name was Jones, but as he had a copy of 'Sons of the Sierras," which he read and quoted from with great freedom and frequency, he very soon got "Joaquin" as a front game. It was removed that he had a history in Arizona and was a bad man when roused. No one inquired concorning his real name, since in the far west it is often taken as a personal insult to ask a man what his name in the States!" was. The first stinde Jane came to French Bar another squaw, a good deal older were replaced by a nice pair of shoes; her black hair hung down her back in two heavy plaits, the ends being joined with a bow of pink ribbon. In her new suit she was quite picturesque and pleasing, and it was not surprising that she was not at first recognized as "Gumboots Jane." But what had wrought this wondrous change in so short a time? Had that strange magic called love, which can suddenly transform the girl into a woman and the woman into a heroine, ready to do and dare anything for her lover, touched her heart? Perhaps so. At any rate it is certain that Dan's kind actions and words of sympathy made a deep impression upon this simple girl. Still, she was more bashful and shy toward him than she had been before she was hurt, for, while she came down to our camp almost every day, she hardly ever ventured within speaking distance of Dan, though she would often sit or stand where she could see him and anxiously watch him as long as she was unobserved or time would permit. But after this had been going on for a week or two he was much surprised one day by her walking straight up to him, and without hesitation saying : "I like you. Bad Indian want to kill white man. Look out!" Before he recovered from his surprise or could say a word, she turned and walked rapidly away.

Dan thought over the matter and tried to reach some conclusion as to what she meant, without any definite result. But he decided that unless the girl knew of some danger either to him or his companions she would not have given this warning, and that it would be proper to tell them about it That same day, however, a man called Scotty, from Nevada, was down at Buck's station on some business, and on his return brought news that caused considerable excitement at the bar and explained what Jane meant by her warning. He said there had been trouble between some Cassigr packers and Indians working for them, which had resulted in the packers killing one of the Indians. Now the natives of Alaska and the adjacent territory have a law, running back as far as their traditions reach, that when a member of one tribe kills a member of a different tribe the killing must be paid for with blankets or other property, or, if not, then it must be settled by human blood, and a life for a life is de anded. The tribe of the deceased will men kill one of the other tribe at the first opportunity. They do not seek the person who committed the homicide. but take the life of any member of his tribe that falls into their power. When white men came into this conn-try, the natives applied this sanguinary law to them, and it was well understood by all in our camp. We knew that one of our lives might have to pay for the native killed by the packers, and we therefore agreed to keep a vigilant watch for such danger. For awhile we carried our guns with pines, and no man as down to the would go away from the camp any considerable distance alone. But as nothing more was heard of matter our vigilance rapidly relaxed, and it was soon almost forgotten. One morning Dan was work on his claim. His partner had wone up the river for some purpose, and he was for the time being alone, with none of the other men even in sight. F was nervous and experienced a vague tear of impending danger. Just the he heard footsteps, and looking up saw lane com-

RAILROAD WAR Between the Southern and the S. A. L.-A.

Sweeping Reduction of Rates Made by the Seaboard Company.

By Telegraph to the Morning Star. BALTIMORE, July 15 .- The war beween the Baltimore Steam Packet Company and the Seaboard Air Line on one side and the Baltimore, Chesapeake & Richmond Steamboat Company and the Southern Railway Company on the other is becoming hot. The latter company recently put on a line of steamers between Baltimore and Norfolk, invading the Steam Packet Company's (old Bay Line) exclusive territory. Some slight cuts in rates are also alleged to have been made. To-day the Steam Packet Company retaliated. In connection with its ally the Seaboard Air Line, it announced a sweeping reduction in all rates, extending to all the principal Southern cities. In addition to the cut in rates the Steam Packet Company will, beginning next Friday, run steamers between Baltimore and Richmond, Va., by way of Chesapeake Bay and James tiver, thereby invading the territory heretolore exclusively controlled by the Southern Railway Company.

Baltimoreans are large holders -in the Seaboard Air Line and the Steam Facket Company, and they state, with their officers, that they will drive the Southern Railway Company out of their territory or force them to carry passengers and freight for nothing. Some of the cuts made to-day were in the neighborhood of 40 per cent.

Does Duck Make You Selfish?

Perhaps she knew her mother was too

Tropical Downpours.

fall is extraordinary. The rain appears to come down, not in separate drops, but in great sheets. In Darwin's "Voyage of the Beagle," writing of a heavy shower, amounting to 1.6 inches in six hours, which occurred during histay in the neighborhood of Rio de J. heiro, the author describes the sound produced by the drops falling on the innumerable.

and says the noise was like the rushing of a great body of water and could be heard at a distance of a quarter of a mile. Campler gives a lively picture of his men were drinking chocolate in the open air, it raised so heavily that some of them declared they could not empty

"Talking of game," said a diner at an up town cafe, "did you ever notice that a duck has a weird effect on a man's selfish instincts? A tender canvasback, cooked to a turn, will arouse a peculiar gluttony in the average good fellow's nature. I've watched this curious development for years among my friends and acquaintances. Just drop into a thub or a swell restaurant about the time the shooting season opens. If you see a fellow hiding over in a corner, his eyealls gleaming like a cannibal's over a young missionary on the fire-why, he's got a duck. Fellows of warm, social qualities, addicted to table fellowship and liberality, become possessed of a solitaire gastronomic mania totally out of their line when they strike duck. They steal off like a dog with a fresh bone, and you can almost hear a growl from the greedy beast if you go too close to that bird. Take that fellow 360 days in the year and you'll find him angling for some other good fellow to share a dinner with him-says he hates to eat alone. Now, I want to know why the succulent duck should arouse this uncanny instinct in a social specimen of the man. Think it out if you can."-New York Herald.

The Princess Metternich

In the days when a black skirt looped up over a short colored petticoat was as daring a costume for a lady of position as the divided garment of the cycleuse is today, the Princess Metternich eagerly urged the empress to wear the new fashion on a public occasion. One of the ladies of the court who knew that the advice, if adopted, would bring censure on her mistress, asked pointedly, "But would you give the same advice to your own empress (of Austria)?" "Oh, no!" was the answer. "But the Empress Elizabeth is a real empress." The other anecdote, though not more creditable to the princess' taste, has a racy humor about it which puts us, in spite of ourselves, on better terms with her. Having lost patience in an argument with Mme. de Persigny, she apnealed to the empress, who begged her to give in, saying of Mme. de Persigny, 'Remember that her mother is mad.' "So her mother is mad?" retorted the princess. "Well, madame, my father is mad. So, why should I give in to her?" -London Spectator.
