A DAISY SPEECH. A Fat Negro Prescher frem Washington Delights the Monroe Darkies with the Meanest Speech of the Campaign. A correspondent of the Charlotte Observer, writing from Monroe, Union county, Oct. 17th, says:

A three-hundred pound, fat, greasy, black negro preacher, said to be from Washington, spoke to the negroes here to-day. His utterances were highly insulting to the white people and correspondingly gratifying to the negro scum he said anything especially mean. said this was the negro's country and this his year. He told them to vote for the honor of their country, for sound money and protection to their industries. He told them to stick to the Northern people and they would get the money. And the crowds, which Democrats of the town has to keep from starving or freezing in the Winter were enthusiastic in their applause. He told them to follow their local leaders unquestioningly, wherever they led. and whoever did not vote the ticket would be branded as a traitor, and would hereafter forever be spotted He said that the Northern people were watching their conduct and would reward them; that Bryan had said that if they voted for him he would give them the climax: He said that recently he and several other colored ministers had visited Maj. McKinley at his bome; that the latter sent carriages and footmen to the depot to take them up to the house where he entertained them. When they got ready to leave, he (the speaker) stepped up to Mrs. McKinley and asked her to allow him to "decorate her" (exact word). She replied: "Certainly, doctor." When he had pinned a badge upon her neck, she said: "Thank you, doctor." He said that had he done that down here he would have been All these negro speakers are being sent here to whip into line a dozen or so negroes who seemed lockned to refuse to vote the Republican-Populist ticket. The Republicans have money to burn when they can thus spend it upon a few ractious negroes. Negro magistrates will be elected in part of this county.

HE WAS LOOKING FOR MEN WHO HAD LOST POCKETBOOKS.

he Found Ten Gentlemen Who Agreed With Him In Describing the Property, hat the Right One He Is Still Seeking. Bough on New York.

A mild mannered man with thin fea-tures, watery blue eyes, a lemon beard, shuffling gait and a general air of guile-lessness stepped into a clothing store on Sixth avenue, not far from Twenty-fifth street, the other day, and accested a fiashly dressed young man who was buying some

"I think you will agree with me, sir, that honesty is the best policy."
"Yep," answered the young man, continuing his inspection of the neckwear. tinuing his inspection of the neck wear.

"Now, I'm an honest man," continued the thin featured gentleman, "and whenever I find an article of value I would consider myself no better than a thief if I did not make every effort to restore it to the owner. I'll guarantee there are not many men in New York who would travel two miles to give up a well filled pocketbook, or to— But, say, have you lost a pook—I—I mean, did you drop anything this morning?" And the honest man shuffled around uneasily, as if he realized that he would not amount to much as a conductor of a cross examination.

The young man grew excited at once and, making a leasty inventory of his pockets, exclaimed: "Great Gawd! I've lost me pocketbook! Let me see if the one you found is mine.

"Were you up in the vicinity of Fifty-ninth street this morning?" asked the honest man, interrupting.
"Yes, I came across from the park and "I thought so. Now, if all men realized the genuine pleasure of being honest—the soothing effect upon the mind and heart—I'm sure there would be less thievery and skullduggery than there is. Now, let me see. You came across from the park, passed by the Columbus monument tepped into a saloon on the circle and go a drink, came out again and walked up Fifty-ninth street toward Ninth avenue?

"Yes, sir. Now give me"—
"Wait a moment, please. As you were walking along you pulled some papers out of your pocket, but you didn't see your pocketbook drop to the ground?"
"That's just the way I must have dropped it. I remember pulling out the papers."

"What sort of a pocketbook was it—was it a long, seal leather—that is, I mean, was it a billbook, with red morocco linings, and were the pocket corners staid with sterling silver clasps? You will par-don me, but I want to be sure you're the man." And a spasm passed over the hon-est man's face, as if the necessity for being so particular was extremely painful to

"Yes," replied the young man, much excited, "my pocketbook was a long, seal leather billbook, with red morocco lining, and the pocket corners were staid with sterling silver clasps. You will note that I have given a minute description of my property. Now please hand it over and I'll reward"— missed the action instituted to reduce passenger rates a quarter of a cent, holding that the present rate is cheap enough.

"I'm not looking for any reward," said the honest man stiffly. "I just simply want to do what's right. My conscience is my reward."

"I beg your pardon," apologized the young man. "I perceive that you are a an. Now, if you"-"One moment, please. How much money was there in your pocketbook? Were there two twenties, six tens, a five. three twosand a one, a commutation mea ticket, a corn cure recipe and a printed leaflet, 'How to Behave at the Table?'

"Yes, sir; that describes the pocketboo I lost most accurately. This gentleman here"-indicating the proprietor of the store-"will note that I have identified my property. I have given you an accurate on of the book and its contents. I would like to pay you for the time and trouble you have expended in tracing me. I am glad to know that there is one honest man in New York. Now, if you will hand over my pocketbook"-'Hand over your pocketbook!" repeat

"Mean!" exclaimed the young fellow "Why, I mean give me that long, seal leather pocketbook that you found on-Fifty-ninth street. It's mine, and I can prove it."

"But, my dear sir," said the mild man-nered man in an offended way, "I found no such pocketbook. I'm an honest man. however, and if you will give me your ad-dress and I should happen to find your property you can be assured of getting it."
"But you told me that you found it, and If you don't give it up I'll have you ar-

"I told you no such thing," blandly re-turned the honest man. "I asked you if you had lost a pocketbook and if it had red morocco linings and if there were so many tens, twenties, fives, twos and ones You are the tenth man I have met today who claims to have lost such a pocketbo containing just the same amount of mone the commutation ticket and the recipe for curing corns. I am sorry for you, my friend"—and here the honest man's voice took on a sad inflection-"but there are so few honest men in New York city that I'm afraid you'll never recover your property. Let me see now-a seal leather pocket-

But here the young man gathered up his purchases and bolted out of the store. "I had no idea there were so many pocketbooks lost in this city every day," said the honest man to the store proprietor, buttoning up his coat and shuffling toward the door. "I believe in being honest—not from policy alone, but because it is the only way to keep your conscience from raveling at the edget. I really hope that poor fellow will find his pocketbook." And the honest man stalked out solemnly and became absorbed in the human

_ Early Public Lotteries. Probably the first public lottery ever held took place in England in 1567, says an exchange, when 40,000 chances were sold at 10 shillings each, the prizes consisting chiefly of plate and the profits going for the repair of certain harbors. The drawing took place at the west door of St. Paul's cathedral. In 1612 another lottery took place at St. Paul's. This was for the benefit of the Virginia company. The highest prize was £1,000, and £20,000

Again, in 1630, a lottery was promoted in order to bring water into London, and after the civil war another lottery helped to replenish an exhausted national exchequer. Private lotteries soon became very common, and being generally conducted on fraudulent principles an act of parliament was passed early in the reign of Queen Anne suppressing them "as pubof Queen Anne suppressing them "as put lie nulsances." In 1694 a loan of £1,000, 000 was raised by the sale of lottery tickets at £10 each, and in 1710 £1,500,000 was raised by £10 tickets, each ticket being entitled to an annuity for 39 years, the blanks 14 shillings per annum, the prizes varying from £5 to £1,000 per annum.— Chicago News.
