CONCERNING CHEESE.

ITS MANUFACTURE AS OLD, AT LEAST, AS THE TIME OF JOB.

Greeks Made It of Sheep's Milk, Jews Named a Valley For It-Memories Called Up by Neufchatel, Gouds and Camembert-The Foet's Tribute to Cheese.

Next to the "staff of life" itself, cheese holds the highest place in universal esteem as an article of food. To recall the old "cheshire "chestnut," we all like cheese, our brothers all like cheese, and we may te fairly certain that if we had a number of additional bröthers they would all like cheese too. Our remote ancestors seem to have enked cheese" as well as we do, for its manufacture is one of the oldest in the Requefort is perhaps now the only important kind made from the milk of sheep, andiently it was not so. . The very word butter itself seems to show that cow's milk was not used for the purpose by the ancient Greeks at all events, as it means literally on chevese.

They seemed to have made their cheese. as the Cyclops Polyphemus made his, of sheep's milk only.

If it be true that only sheep's milk was used for cheesemaking in primitive times. then it is easy to explain why we do not find it among those domestic arts of which the ancient Egyptians have left us such abundant pictorial records, since we know that the Hyksos made "shepherds an abomination to the Egyptians."

Cheesemaking must at one time have teen a very important industry among the Israelites, as one of the principal valleys a Jerusalem, that between Mounts Zion and Moriah, was known in the time of Josephus as the Tyropeon, or Cheesemak

Nowadays cheese is almost entirely made from the milk of cows, about 100,-000 being employed in Cheshire alone. The lequefort does not owe its great excellence to its ovine origin, but to the splendid and natural cellarage-a labyrinth of dry monnain caverns, wherein it is matured. Their ventilation is so perfect that no deterious "mold" or "must" can lodge At Mont d'Or, in France, a very good JOURNALISM IN GREECE. Newspapers of the Land of lomer.

The newspapers of Greece, the kingdom of George I, do not take very high rank in Europe, either in respect to their progressive features or their extensive circulation. The standard size of a Greek newspaper is 12 1-2 by 9 inches, and there are usually four pages devoted to the discussion of political and theological matters, with an occasional reference to local occurrences, when adequate corroboration has been obtained.

Athens, the capital of Greece, has about the same population as Grand Rapids. The ancient Greek city maintains, however, nine daily newspapers, not one of which has more than 5,000 circulation. The names of these papers are themselves a fair indication of the solemnity which covers the periodical publication business in Greece. These are The Ora (The Hour), The Plinghhenesia (Regeneration), graftus (The Telegram). There are,

THREE OLD MAIDS. When the three Misses Hiteshews had eached a rather uncertain age and found that the marriage lottery was rather uncertain, they began to seek for something to make their happiness more congenial; so they adopted as a motto "United we stand, divided we fall," and by so doing agreed never to keep a secret from the others and that the wish of one should be the wish of all.

Their fate seemed sealed from that time, as no sensible man would dare to make love to three women in the same house, where there were to be no secrets.

But the time did come when they had to admit to themselves that they were in love -if not love, it resembled it so closely that it was a splendid substitute for the genuine article. Each knew she was deceiving the others, but had no idea that all were guilty of the same offense. And each was willing-yea, anxio that held this union bind herself to the

He was about 50, and the three sisters admitted to each other that he was a handsome man, and that if he ever did marry again it would be a lucky woman who succeeded in becoming Mrs. Albright the second. Had they dared to look at one another a slight blush might have been detected on the face of each, but they went on with their work and did not renew the conversation about him. One morning he called and asked Mary to accompany him to the home of a sick member. It was with a jealons eye that they saw her depart. They had both noticed that he held Mary's hand longer than there was any necessity of doing when he entered, while he merely shook hands with them. During the course of the drive Rev. Albright talked to her of his hopes and his intentions and of his great desire of finding a true and trusty helpmate who would be willing to help share his many heavy burdens. He said that he thought he had met this woman, and should she consent to be his wife he was sure he would be able to do more good in the cause in which he was enlisted. He had not known her long, but even during the short acquaintance he had seen in her the traits of a great and noble woman. By the time they returned home Mary was so confident of becoming Mrs. Albright the second that she was anxious to tell her sisters, and when she faced them it was with fear that they would discover her secret in her face. Several days after this Kate was called upon by the minister to go with him to see the same person whom he and Mary had visited. When they left, Mary watched the carriage out of sight, expecting on the return of her sister to be confronted by her and to be made to tell the truth concerning her ride with the minister. She would have been glad to tell it, as it was the greatest secret she had ever possessed, and nothing is harder for a woman to do than to keep a secret. After Rev. Albright had talked to Kate about the same way that he did to Mary, they returned home, Kate with the same belief as Mary, that the
