He was sitting near the door of the jury room and when the jurors knocked on the door summoning the sheriff, his face took on an anxious look. When the twelve men filed into the room and took their seats, and as Clerk Penn called the roll of the jurors the prisoner did not appear to be more excited than the rest of the spectators. "Have you made a verdict, gentle men?" inquired the court. "We have," the jurors assented, and at the same time Mr. Stone, the foreman, passed the verdict up to the clerk, who read it aloud. Powers, always pale, grew ghastly white as the verdict was read, and his face betokened great mental anguish. Then, somewhat regaining his composure, he turned to the Misses Dangerfield, who had been in conversation with him, and said: "I was not expecting that. The verdict is unjust.' There was no sort of demonstration following the verdict and the vast crowd filed out of the court house al
