—What a little god some very big people worship.

—Bad company proves more than a good confession.

—God is not the religion that is not using both hands to lift up men.

—There is no man so far gone but the grace of God can reach him—Moody.

—The morals of an excited crowd are always lower than the standards of the best individuals in the crowd.

—One reason why more mountains are not being won by faith is that so few people are willing to begin with mole hills.

—I have noticed this, that when a man is full of the Holy Ghost he is the very last man to be complaining of other people.—Moody.

—If we are full of pride and conceit and ambition and self-love and pleasure and the world, there is no room for the spirit of Christ.—Moody.

—Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion is probably the most indispensable support.—George Washington.

—The cross is the great centre of God's moral universe! To this centre God always draws, and the life of faith ever looked forward, until the Saviour came. And now we must ever turn to that cross as to the centre of all blessing and the basis of all worship, both on earth and in heaven.—In time and throughout all eternity.

Madge Marbury's Message

Summer Romance in City. "No, I'm tired of seaside romances, so I give it up here and see what sort of a romance a summer in New York has to offer."

Sam Storror jumped upon a north bound electric car as he spoke, leaving the two men staring after him and wondering what his plans in a speculative mood.

"I'll bet," murmured Ralph Ralston, as he hailed the next south bound car, "that Storror's had a row with Madge Marbury."

Since the date, just four years ago, when they had left Harvard, neither Sam Storror nor Ralph Ralston had settled down to any serious occupation. They had devoted themselves to the somewhat indefinite pastime of "looking around."

It had been the kind of looking around usual with idle men of private means—moderate dissipation and love-making, or the pretense of love-making, with women who were as well off and as idle as themselves.

But it must be admitted of the two Storror's life had been much more innocent, and his affair with Miss Madge Marbury might have resulted in matrimony ere this were it not for the frequency of their petty quarrels, none of which might ever have occurred if they had not had so much idle time to quarrel in.

The excitement of these little tiffs had been to pull upon him, and when the last one occurred he decided that he would stay in town when Madge went away. In fact, he was hard up for a new sensation.

The electric car whirled him rapidly up Madison avenue. He looked at the motes of dust in the air and the shadows in the house fronts—inevitable symptoms of the summer season—and the thought came to him of the darkened and reception rooms so gay with beauty and fashion in winter time. But the butterflies had fled to shore and mountain, leaving Madison avenue to console itself until the next summer.

Madge Marbury had gone to Bar Harbor. "Goodby, Mr. Storror," she had said to him just before they parted. "I hope you'll find some romance in the city to compensate you for your self imposed and solitary martyrdom."

These words came back to him now, and the recollection made him feel more than ever that he had not done his duty during his summer in town. He would not have Madge Marbury chaff him on her return.

Ralph Ralston thoroughly disagreed with Sam Storror as to the relative charms of city and seaside in summer. This was natural, for the two men had never agreed upon any question since the day they first met, and neither bore much love for the other.

So a few days after the meeting with Storror Ralston was in the vortex of Bar Harbor's gay life, troubling himself very little about romance and contenting himself with the pleasures of the city to compensate for his self imposed and solitary martyrdom.

There was no more agreeable reality than his present proximity to Miss Madge Marbury on the veranda of a cottage that nestled prettily up upon the side of a hill.

They were enjoying the beauty of the cool Maine night. The intense blue of the heavens gave that suggestion of peace and content which, though the suggestion may be always there, is only borne in on us under the spell of certain moods; the song of the pines kept time with the more distant music of the incomparable sea.

There was a mingled fragrance of balsam and odor of ocean brine. "Can you imagine, Miss Marbury, a more fantastic notion than his staying in town, and when he returns, he might be here?"

Ralston had been expatiating upon the eccentricities of Sam Storror. "I don't know," she said. "We may find out romance in the most unexpected places."

"I rather imagine that Storror somehow is not without some definite idea of where to find his romance." She began to think. "If that were so, why should he not find it near her? Her vanity was flattered, and Ralston, being a good tactician, tried to follow up his advantage.

"Of course," said Marbury. "I am not in Sam Storror's confidence. He is not a very wise man to head off the sudden turns of a feminine train of thought, and his words had that opposite effect to that he had intended."

She said impulsively: "No; if you had his confidence, you would probably tell me more."

The next moment she regretted her impulsiveness, for it was no part of her policy openly to antagonize him until she had more fully made up her mind as to what the thing was to repair her mistake.

"You take me too seriously, Mr. Ralston. You know, women must not be too literally." Ralston was far from being inclined to take the sex too seriously, but it was as well that women, for their own peace of mind, should think otherwise. He took his cue from her and answered, with another laugh, "I would not use any one's seriousness to think of Sam Storror installed over the city."

"After all," she said, "the words escaped her before she could obey an intuition to keep them back."

"You would not have me betray confidences?" he rejoined. She began to think. "If that were so, why should he not find it near her? Her vanity was flattered, and Ralston, being a good tactician, tried to follow up his advantage."

"After all," she said, "the words escaped her before she could obey an intuition to keep them back."

NO NECESSITY FOR ARMY OF 100,000.

Speedy and Complete Collapse of the War in the Philippines Expected.

Leaders Are Surrendering. Accepting Terms of Amnesty Offered by the U. S. Government and Bringing in Followers and Their Arms.

WASHINGTON, March 30.—As a result of the capture of Aguinaldo and the belief among officials that a speedy and complete collapse of the insurrection in the Philippines will follow, the full strength of the army authorized by the recent army reorganization act may not be enlisted.

The question is being canvassed by the President and the authorities but no decision will be reached until the views of General MacArthur and others in the Philippines are obtained. If the conditions turn out as the officials here believe they will, there will be no necessity of recruiting an army of 100,000 men.

Two prominent Senators with whom the President talked to day said that the strength of the army authorized by the act is unnecessary to meet the conditions. Not a man would be enlisted whose services were not required to cope with the situation.

The new army act provides for an army with a minimum of 65,000 men and a maximum strength of 100,000. The discretion as to the size of the force to be enlisted is lodged in the President. It is he, therefore, who will ultimately decide what the situation calls for.

Instructions to Gen. MacArthur. The telegram sent to General MacArthur at Manila expressing the appreciation of the President and Secretary of War over the successful expedition of General Funston, also contained instructions to General MacArthur. The nature of the instructions is not made public, but it is known that they relate to Aguinaldo.

The position of the government is that the insurrection is not to be considered as a civil war, but as a rebellion against the United States government. The government has offered amnesty if they lay down their arms and accept the sovereignty of the United States.

Aguinaldo's Position. Aguinaldo has not placed himself in a position to be offered any terms by the United States government. He has proclaimed a republic and is governing the Philippines. No attempt will be made to bargain with him and he will first be treated as a prisoner of war.

More Submissions. The War Department to day received the following cablegram from General MacArthur at Manila, dated March 30th:

General Genorimo, commanding Eastern Division, Morong Province, has submitted a plan for the capture of the insurgent forces. He has twelve guns, twenty nine machine guns, and a number of other arms.

THE HOTEL FIRE

IN RICHMOND, VA. Further Particulars of the Burning of the Magnificent Jefferson.

Reports of Loss of Life Are Not True. Only One Guest Was Injured—Fire Caused by an Electric Wire.

By Telegram to the Morning Star. RICHMOND, Va., March 30.—The magnificent Jefferson Hotel, the pride of Richmond, was practically wiped out by fire early this morning.

All that remains of the splendid structure, which was built and furnished by the late Lewis Ginter at a cost of over $1,000,000, are the two clock towers and a part of the court fronting on Franklin street.

The fire was discovered near midnight high up in the Main street section of the building, and at first was not considered serious. The hotel apparatus was brought into play but the hose burst.

The fire spread rapidly and messengers were sent to the building to awaken the guests, many of whom had to be dragged out of bed.

JUGGLERS AND ACROBATS. Americans Are Now More Clever Than Chinese and Japs.

The older generation of theater goers will not doubt recall the troupe of Japanese acrobats and jugglers that created such a sensation in this country some years ago.

"All Right" was the one to which "Little All Right" belonged. The Japs and Chinese used to be considered the best jugglers and acrobats in the world, but they are far behind the Americans of today.

Their big reputation has been overshadowed long ago. "All Right" was given the mention because of the signal he would always give his father when they were about to perform some daring acrobatic feat.
