T has long been a disideratum in Dental Science to arrive at some method by which the many erevices in which food is lodged about Artificial Teeth might be avoided. The plan now adopted furnishes this, without any of the inconveniences which it was feared would accompany it. The teeth being attached to the plate a the teeth firm in their places. The teeth being united at their base, and to the plate upon which they are set, acquires a greater degree of firmness and solidity than place for the lodgment of food to vitiate the saliva or infect the breath; an advantage which will be readily recognized by all who have used teeth as they have
