A NEGRO WEDDING. Objection raised-Great Row in a Church .-On last Sunday evening the African Church on St. Paul street, First District, was filled to over-flowing with colored folks, who had congregated there to witness a marriage ceremony which had been announced previously. In due time the bridal party arrived in a carriage, and the bride, dressed up in white muslin and white satin slippers, sprang out upon the pavement and walked up the aisle, leaning upon the arm of an elderly colored "gemman." The bridegroom, in broadcloth, white kid gloves and patent leather boots, stepped up to the altar with rather a confused look, seeming as he glanced over the crowd, as if he was fearful of seeing persons present whom he did not wish invited to the ceremony. At last the old black pastor adjusted his spectacles with the air of an executioner, and then looked to see that the couple and those in waiting were properly

arranged, and commenced.

The exhortation on the subject of matrimony was immense, and was listened to with marked attention by all except the bridegroom, who seemed somewhat nervously inclined and looked as it he wished the affair was over. At last the old MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, black patriarch commenced the ceremony of uniting them, and as a matter of form, nothing else, said in a clear voice which could be heard all was a moment of breathless silence, the bride All losses are punctually paid within 90 days after turned half around boldly, while the bridegroom twitched the muscles of his face nervously, and looked toward the carpet of the chancel. next moment the till then orderly congregation was in commotion. A noise was then heard at the door. Some exclamations of anger, in a woman's voice, were plainly discernible above the buzz of the folks in church; and then, fairly sweeping along the aisle, with a baby in her arms came a likely negro woman, fairly foaming over with excitement. Reaching the railing of the chancel, and holding her baby high up in her arms, she exclaimed, in a voice which frightened ed the bridegroom's knees to quake," "I object to dis ere marriage, Mister Preecher! dat ar man am my husbin afore God!" The whole colored congregation, the majority of whom were women, here rose to their feet, and the bridegroom, seeing that a storm was brewing, made a bold stroke to save himself. "Whar's de pruf?" he exclaimed, fearing to look at the woman, and turning round appealingly to the excited audience. The woman held up a small bundle, which oscillated somewhat at the top, in her excited handling of it, and the crowd was satisfied. The bridegroom dared not look back, but he judged from the countenances of the congregation what the woman was doing, and seeing that the game was up in that quarter, grabbed hold of his bride and half bore her down the aisle towards the door. The Babel that followed can not be described, and some of the excited old women worked themselves into such a frenzy that they caught up their "old men's" sticks and pursued the couple to the carriage door with evil intent Fortunately for the bridal party, the Jehu of the vehicle into which they sprang, lashed his horse done; and to others that may want discounts, Pension and dashed away just in time to save their bacon. business, &c., &c I offer my services, with a promise After getting eleverly out of danger, a council of war was held in the carriage, and the occupants, deciding that they had been much aggrieved; concluded to try another preacher up town, who, we learned, tied the knot and sent them forth rejoic-
