Patriots among Politicians .- During the gene ral prevalence among politicians of this reckless and destructive party strife, there are yet among them some true patriots who think more of their 20 00 country than of self. I will mention three who 15 00 have endeared themselves to the people by their 12 00 efforts to save the Union-John J. Crittenden,

Stephen A. Douglas, and Thurlow Weed. Mr. Crittenden, in urging his plau of compro mise, declared that for his part, he would gladly give up any private or party opinion, if by so doing he could save the country. Mr. Douglas declared his readiness to go about the work of effecting a compromise without reference to any speech he has ever made, or any vote he has ever given.

Mr. Weed proposed a basis of compromise that was every way fair and honorable; and coming, as it did, from the leading editor of the victorious party, it exhibited a graceful magnanimity, which has unfortunately not been appreciated by the party .- Correspondence Journal of Commerce. Sensation Dispatches .- We agree with the Savannah Republican, that, in these times of popular excitement, when every floating rumor, however vague, is caught up by the Associated Press and individuals, and spread broadcast over the country, it is due to truth to warn the public against placing an undue amount of faith in the telegraphic dispatches which find their way into the. papers. In fact, for weeks past, it has kept the telegraph busy to correct one day the statement made on the day previous.

The truth is, that the telegraph is a monstrous swindle and a monstrous nuisance. Only evening before last, about eleven o'clock at night, we received one or two despatches, containing news that had reached us by mail the morning before If the Penitentiary had its due, these telegraphic villains would no longer swindle the press and

An Old Church .- In company with a large concourse of the citizens of this county, one of the Editors attended the funeral service of a lady who was buried, last Sabbath, in the grave yard attached to the old McPherson church. Long before a house of worship was erected in Fayetteville, this church maintained a flourishing existence. Forty years ago, Mr. McDiarmid and Mr. Lindsay preached to immense congregations, who came from 10 to 20 miles to hear the word of life. A majority of the worshippers then spoke the Gaelic only, and a distinct service was always held for their benefit. The church is now in ruins, though the quaint old pulpit and sounding board still survive the wreck of time. It is proposed to rebuild the house and to collect another congregation among the descendants of those who sleep in the crowded graveyard.

The Southern Pacific Railroad .- There are now 270 hands employed in grading the road west of Marshall, Texas, and it was expected that, by the first of January, there would be a force of 500 employed. Besides, a considerable number in addition to this force are employed in getting out cross-ties, building bridges, &c. The sub-contractors have obligated themselves to complete 25 miles of road ready for the iron by the 1st of May

N. C. Presbyterian.

Capture of Two Slavers .- The U.S. steamer Mohawk, Lt. Craven, captured the brig Tocoa, and took her into Key West, last weck. She was found completely fitted out as a slaver. The bark Mary I. Kimbal, from New Orleans, was captured by the same vessel, under the same cirabove reward to any person delivering him to me at cumstances, the next day. She was also carried to Key West.

> vant does not, in his judgment, justify the supposition that she is lost. He gives good reasons for his belief. Six Wagon Loads of Gold .- The gold which came to New York by the Persia, from Liverpool, during the time of the panic a week or two ago, upwards of $3,100,000, weighed 11,700 pounds, and loaded six express wagons. It was quite a consolatory sight to the cramped merchants, in the height of hard times, to see six horses each

An Eccentric Millionaire .- Among the sub-pulling a wagon load of gold along Broadway.

The missing U. S. Vessel Levant .- Commander Maury says that the long passage of the Lescribers to Audubon's magnificent work, on ornithology, the subscription price of which was 1,000 dollars a copy, appeared the name of John Jacob Astor. During the progress of the work, the prosecution of which was exceedingly expensive, M. Audubon, of course, called upon several of his subscribers for payment. It so happened that Mr. Astor (probably that he might not be troubled about small matters) was not applied to before the delivery of the letter-press and plates. Then, however, Audubon asked for his thousand dollars but he was put off with one excuse or another. "Ah, M. Audubon," would the owner of millions observe, "you have come at a bad time; money is very scarce; I have nothing in bank; I have invested all my funds." At length, for a sixth time, Audubon called on Astor for his thousand dollars. As he was ushered into the presence, he found William B. Astor, the son, conversing with his father. No sooner did the rich man see the man of art, than he began, "Ah, M. Audubon, so you have come again after your money. Hard times, M. Audubon-money scarce." But just suppose we must contrive to let you have some of your money if possible. William," he added, calling to his son, who had walked into an adjoining parlor, "have we any money at all in the bank?" "Yes, father," replied the son, supposing that he was asking an earnest question pertinent to what they had been talking about when the ornithologist came in, "we have two hundred and seventy thousand dollars in the Bank of New York, seventy thousand dollars in the City Bank, thousand four hundred in the Mechanics', eightythree thousand-" "That'll do, that'll do,' exclaimed John Jacob, interupting him; it seems that William can give a cheque for your money.'

In Portland, Oregon, there is a man who lived with his wife several years and had several children. At last she got tired of him, and proposed that they should obtain a divorce. He said he had no objection, if she would support him She agreed to do so, and they were divorced. She is now married again, and supports her former husband by retaining him in the family as a
