A MARVELOUS ACCOUNT.—A writer who dates at Raleigh, and signs himself "S," has been publishing a series of articles in the N. Y. Times, on the "Mineral Resources of North Carolina," (or rather of the Deep River region of North Carolina.) We have ourselves, from personal observation as well as from the Reports of Professor Emmons and others, an idea that these resources are of immense extent and value, but we confess that this Raleigh writer has "astonished" us, (as he proposed to do,) not only as to the extent of those resources, but still more as to the sums invested in works for their development, the number of hands employed therein, and the results of their labors. The Deep River Coal and Iron Company, for instance, so he says, "paid $110,000 for the estate, [1000 acres, 6 miles up the river from Egypt,] and they have since expended in cash paid out for the construction of works, for machinery, and for opening mines, about $175,000. They estimate the completion of the works, so as to bring fully into operation all the resources of the estate, will cost them perhaps $35,000 more—making the entire cost of estate and outfit $320,000." "When in full work they employ about 100 men."

These are considerable sums! A very particular account is given of large buildings, 75 feet square, all of stone or brick, with 2 engines, 4 boilers, and a vast deal of other machinery, four wrought-iron stills, holding 1000 gallons each, two of which are now in use and "can be run twice full every 24 hours—making a total of 4000 gallons, or 100 bbls. per day," of coal oil. This crude oil is produced at an average cost of 44 cents per gallon, and is refined and delivered and sold in New York at a cost of 21¢ cents per gallon. It readily sells in New York at 85 to 90 cents per gallon.

But even this is not all. In making every 100 gallons of oil, a ton of pig iron is produced. This costs $9 55, delivered and sold in New York; and it sells there at $23 to $30 per ton.

But this company has coal also. This coal costs to lay down and sell in New York $4 46 a ton; and "it sells now at $5 a ton."

Seeing such a profitable business in each of its branches, we are tempted to follow the writer in his inquiries into the extent of the property. He says there are 9,690,000 tons of coal on the estate, 24,200,000 tons of iron ore, 130,600,000 tons of slate stone, each ton of this yielding at a low average 99 gallons of oil!

After all this it can hardly surprise any one that this Raleigh writer says—
"My arithmetic does not go far enough to multiply the yield of oil, pig iron, and coal by the quantity of the raw material—and again to multiply the product by the net profit on sales. To give these results would run you short of cyphers. Some adept in mathematics might figure it up, but you would not be able to comprehend the result any more than you could comprehend the causes of the panic of 1857, or the President's last message, or the speed you must travel to keep up in a race with the chariot of the sun, or to hob-nob with the man in the moon.
