scribes what he saw of the battle of Manassas:-We were made to lie down just behind the battery, in order to escape in some measure the shot, shell, bombs, grape and cannister and every deadly missile the inventive genius of the infernal Yankees could suggest. For two hours we lay there, three fires converging right over us—two rifled batteries and 800 of Wood's sharp-shooters—who got to pouring it into us before we were ordered to charge. For the whole two hours, without any cessation, the air was filled with grape and cannister, and the fragments of bursting bombs and shells-sometimes a shell would burst just over us and bring death by the wholesale-one shell burst over Edmundson's company, killing five men, mortally wounding another, and killing one man in the 27th. To add to the horror of the scene, and, if possible, to try the men's nerves to the utmost, just about the time the enemy's fire was hottest, a bomb struck one of our caissons, igniting the ammunition in it and causing it to explode with a tremendous noise: the scene was indescribable, and yet our men remained firm as their own native hills--not a man in any company changed his position. For two long, two mortal hours, we endured this terrible ordeal, expecting every moment to be mangled out of the form of humanity.

At last, the welcome words came from Jackson's own lips-"Up 4th, and charge." And what a relief it was to spring up and feel that we could strike at least one blow in self defence, that we could meet death fighting and not be killed lying helpless on the ground. Up sprang every man, and the direction being indicated where we were to charge, we went, under three fires as I have already told you, 800 Fire Zouaves immediately in front, backed by the New York 69th, a battery in their rear and a little to their right in the same field, another battery in a cornfield still farther to the right. On the men went steadily and firmly; my company had two low fences to cross, we sprang over the first without let or hindrance, but when we came to the second the most terrific volley of the whole day was poured into us just as we were getting over; five men fell dead around me, in a space I think, of less than 20 feet square; they were men of other companies, got mixed up with mine in crossing the fence. I never heard any thing like the whistling of bullets just at this point; the very air seemed laden with iron hail all around me; they flew to my right, to my left, and over my head, scattering death around about me, yet not one touched me. The homely language of Crawford Stevens very well describes the battle as we crossed the fence. He crossed the fence by my side, under that fearful volley. Recounting his experiences of the battle to me, afterwards, he remarked "well Captain, the shower was powerful thick thar whar we crossed the fence." DARTIES having seasoned WHITE OAK TIMBER ford told the truth, the shower was powerful thick. from one and a half to six inches in thickness, and But, notwithstanding all, our men sprang over the fence determined and undaunted. As soon as they got over, they answered the volley with a cheer that was good to hear; it sounded defiance, and the Yankees knew full well what it meant, for the sound had not yet died away, when they they were too slow for our swift messengers of BIDS will be received at the Office of the Western death; seeing no chance to reach them with the Guilford...C P Mendenhall, C E Shober, J L Gorrell.

We soon cleared the bushes of 300 Laborers Wanted Im- the rascals, and saved our battery. The remnant of our regiment pursued and engaged the 79th N. Y. in the cornfield.

Fresh regiments on our side came up quickly and engaged the other Yankee regiments; they began to retreat, the cavalry were ordered to charge, the retreat became a rout, and the sun went down on a bloody but gloriously won field. I

The Blockade Question .- The London Globe Passengers and light freights carried with celerity, and the Shipping Gazette attack the details of the blockade. The Post says if England drifts into the American quarrel, the fault will be with Lincoln, who has attempted a blockade which he cannot render LINCOLN'S BLOCKADE OF NO AVAIL. complete. The London Times ridicules and laughs at the threats of a prominent New York journal against England's going into the ports. It fears the question of blockade in America may involve England in some difficult complication. And remarks that there is a little cloud which, although only as large as a man's hand, may come to overshadow the whole sky. On the last day of the session Lord Palmerston stated his views on the question of blockade. He said, in effect, if the blockading torce should al-CARPETING, BAGGING, ROPE, TWINE, IRON, low any one vessel to enter a blockaded port by the payment of duties, the blockade from that moment is raised-A belligerent may seal up a port, but if he lets one vessel in his right is gone. It follows, therefore, that when a Federal cruiser willingly allows a ship to pass a blockaded port upon payment of customs, the blockade will be at Secessionists in Washington .- The New York Herald, of Saturday, says: "Treason is rampent in Washington, and there is no denying the fact, humiliating and ungrateful as it may be to the loyal citizens of the Union." The Herald then gives enumeration of 143 "known secessionists," and 75 "suspected," in the different departments. This is a pretty good showing, under the circumstances. It will be a great deal better when we get there .- Richmond Whig.

Rather Close .- A Yankee rifleman in the late fight seeing a cannon ball bury itself in a bank near him, sprang to the hole it had made, saying "Shoot away; you can't hit twice in the same place." Instantly another shot struck a few feet distant, covering the fellow with sand and gravel. Emerging from his new quarters, he continued the unfinished sentence, "but you came so pesky near it that the first hole is uncomfortable.'

One effect in the establishment of our Government of an independent system of patents has been to throw the vast number of Yankee patent monopolies, many of them of the hugest kind, which Yankee inventors and hordes of lobbymen have made immense fortunes, are thrown open to public manufacture and use. - Rich.
