AN AFFECTING SCENE.

One of those affecting incidents occurred at the departure of the Yankee prisoners for New Orleans, that, whether concerning friends or foes, must move the stoniest heart. A young lady, of Northern birth, who has been for sometime a resident in this State, and, having a lucrative occupation, preferred to remain here after the war broke out, discovered, by some means, that her brother was amongst the prisoners in this city. She had made several ineffectual applications and attempts to see him. Owing to the necessity of military law in such a case, her most urgent requests had been refused. For some weeks the poor girl had been too unwell to leave her home, but was recovering, and sitting at her window just as the prisoners passed by, on their way to the depot. An impression seized her that her brother was amongst them, though a separation of several years and the difference of dress and circumstances rendered recognition difficult. A misgiving, however-one of those impulses of the heart that are not to be stifled—caused her to start to her feet, and, hastily throwing on her shawl and bonnet, she summoned a friend and hurried to the depot. There the guard was so watchful and the line so strict that she was unable to approach within ten yards; but, with straining eyes and anxious love, did the poor girl endeavor to scrutinize each probable form, until a mutual gaze met hers, and revealed the object of her search. Her brother recognized her. Darting forward, but repulsed by the guard, each precious moment threatening to sever them, perhaps forever, who can judge of the agony of the poor stricken sister? Some of the bystanders, becoming interested in the scene, used their influence to permit a message to be conveyed to the prisoner. "Oh! is their anything I can do for him, anything he wants?" she exclaimed. But the wants of the prisoner were few. With loss of liberty, what else could avail him? "Take him this," said she, 'it is all I have in the world." And she handed a small, a very small packet. So they passed to the prisoner a few dollar bills, with some small change, not knowing whether the poor boy would ever find any need for it, or an opportunity of spending it. Soon the cars were ready. Open cars, with seats arranged upon them, and a boarding round the edge for security. He took his seat with the rest, in full view of his sobbing sister, and the cars began to slowly move. With an irresistible impulse she darted forward. Sympathy governed stronger than law the crowd who were watching the departure; an opening was made through the guard; and she reached his hand. One grasp, so firm, so tight, was fastened upon the hand that she was drawn along the track, as the quickening motion of the engine was bearing her long absent brother yet further from her presence, and not until her arm was well nigh strained from her body, and the poor prisoner, as he leaned himself towards her, was in danger of being dragged from the car, could that long, loving grasp be loosened If Lincoln and his war advisers could but have witnessed this heart-rending scene, and did they but reflect that thousands and ten thousands of their countrymen and ours are daily suffering sorrows such as these, and even worse bereave-Congress is to assemble on the 18th day of Feb- ments, must they not pause and question the fanaticism that is now urging them on, and that incongruous "philanthropy" which they are straining as an excuse for fighting?-Rich. > SALE OF A SULTAN'S JEWELS. The new Sultan of Turkey not only abolished the harem, deposed a vicious Prime Minister, and introduced to the notice of the astonished Turks a legitimate heir to his throne, but sent all the jewels of Abdul-Medjid to the auction shops of London to be sold under the hammer.

> These jewels are magnificent, and Belgravia has had a delectable time in competing for them at the auction sales. The Times gives this account of the collection and the prices it brought: "The jewels comprise a great variety of ornaments in form of necklaces, ear-rings, bracelets, brooches, stomachers, and head-dresses, many of them of great magnitude and splendor, and of exof flowers of natural size, composed entirely of fine brilliants and rose diamonds, and in some cases surmounted with diamond birds; presentation boxes of gold, beautifully enamelled, and richly set with brilliants and rose diamonds, in clusters of flowers and other designs, watches and chatelaines, presenting to the eye masses of diamonds of the greatest taste and beauty; the whole forming a more splendid assemblage of jewels than has ever before been offered for public competition. The following were the more valuable lots disposed of: A gold presentation snuff box, beautifully enamelled with flowers and musical instruments, the top surmounted with a cluster of rich brilliants, £87. A square matted basket-work gold snuff-box, very massive, and studded with no less than two hundred and sixty-four fine brilliants, £180. An oval gold snuff-box, enamelled with musical instruments, on the top of the Sultan's cipher in gold, surrounded with a circle of brilliants, and double circle of rose diamonds and brilliant sprigs, the whole encircled with a border of brilliants; and a small shaped ditto, in yellow enamelled, with groups of flowers and music, on top a ship at sea, sails, hulls and sea, composed of exquisite small brilliants and roses, the borders of festoons and stars of fine brilliants, £190 10s. A pair of zekis, in the turquoise enamel with flowers and clusters of brilliants and roses; two centres of large fine brilliants; and a pair of ditto, pierced scroll and flower-work, with birds, the whole composed of fine brilliants and roses, £615. A gold watch, enameled with flowers and enriched with fine brilliants and chatelaine with clusters of brilliants. Another, with black enamel, en-THE undersigned offers for sale, in the Coal region, and within eight miles of the terminus of the Fayetteville & Western Rail Road on Deep River, adjoining the land belonging to the estate of George Wilcox, dec'd, and lying three miles South from Carbonton, on Little Pocket Creek, Moore county.
