NORAH McCARTEY.

A REMINISCENCE OF THE MISSOURI CAMPAIGN. During the stay of Col. Jones in Nashville, we had the pleasure of many fireside talks with him upon affairs in the West, which he discusses with ready frankness, interspersed with many anecdotes and illustrations. These stories have led us to believe that, thus far, Missouri has the better of other seats of hostility for the real romance of war. Most assuredly the fight there has been waged with fiercer earnest than almost anywhere else. The remote geography of the country, the rough unhewn character of the people, the intensity and ferocity of the passions excited, and the general nature of the complicity reduced to a warfare essentially partizan and frontier, give to its progress a wild aspect, peculiarly susceptible to deeds, and suggestive of thoughts, of romantic interest. None of these struck us more forcibly than the story of Norah McCartey.

She lived in the interior of Missouri—a little, pretty, black-eyed girl with a soul as huge as a mountain, and a form as frail as a fairy's, and the courage and pluck of a buccaneer into the bargain. Her father was an old man-a secessionist. She had but a single brother, just growing from boyhood to youthhood, but sickly and lamed. The family had lived in Kansas during the troubles of '57, when Norah was a mere girl of fourteen, or thereabouts. But even then her beauty, wit and devil-may-care spirit were known far and wide; and many were the stories told along the border of her sayings and doing.

Not long after the Federals came into her neighborhood, and after they had forced her father to take the oath, which he did partly because he Granville-A. W. Venable, T. L. Hargreve, was a very old man, unable to take the field, and hoped thereby to save the security of his household, and partly because he could not help himself; not long after these two important events in the history of our heroine, a body of men marched up one evening, whilst she was on a visit to a neighbor's, and arrested her sickly, weak brother, bearing him off to Leavenworth City, where he was lodged in the military guard-house.

It was nearly night before Norah reached home. When she did so, and discovered the outrage which had been perpetrated and the grief of her old father, her rage knew no bounds. Although the mists were falling, and the night was closing in, dark and dreary, she ordered her horse to be re saddled, put on a thick surtout, belted a sash round her waist, and, sticking a pair of ivory handled pistols in her bosom, started off after the soldiers. The post was many miles distant. But that she did not regard. Over hill, through marsh, under cover of the darkness, she gallopped on to the headquarters of the enemy. At last the call of a sentry brought her to a stand, with a hoarse-

"Who goes there?" "No matter," she replied, "I wish to see Col. Prince, your commanding officer, and instantly,

Somewhat awed by the presence of a young fe-male on horseback at that late hour, and perhaps struck by her imperious tone of command, the Yankee guard, without hesitation, conducted her into the fortifications, and thence to the quarters of the Colonel commanding, with whom she was

"Well, madam," quoth the Yankee officer, with bland politeness, "to what have I the honor of

"Is this Col. Prince?" replied the brave girl, quietly. "It is, and yourself?"

"No matter. I have come here to inquire whether you have a lad by the name of McCartey a prisoner?" "There is such a prisoner?"

"May I ask, for why?" "Certainly, for being suspected of treasonable onnection with the enemy. "Treasonable connection with the enemy!

Why, the boy is sick and lame. He is besides my brother, and I have come to ask his immediate release.' The Yankee officer opened his eyes; was sorry he could not comply with the request of so win-ning a suppliant; and must really beg her to desist and leave the fortress. "I demand his release," cried she, in reply "That you cannot have," returned he; "the boy is a rebel and a traitor, and unless you retire Madam, I shall be forced to arrest you on a similar suspicion. "Suspicion! I am a rebel and a traitor, too, if Of Legislative Power in General; Legislative Power in North Carolina; Legislative Powers of Justices of the you wish. Young McCarty is my brother, and I don't leave this tent until he goes with me. Or-

> A picture that! There stood the heroic girl; eyes flashing fire, cheek glowing with earnest will, lips firmly set with resolution, and hand out-stretched with a the now thoroughly frightened, startled, aghast soldier, who cowered, like blank paper before

"Quick!" she repeated, "order his release, or you die."

It was too much. Prince could not stand it. He bade her lower her infernal weapon for God's

And the order was given; the lad was brought out; and drawing his arm in hers, the gallant sister marched out of the place, with one hand grasp-Partition: Patrol Committees: Processioners; Tax Listers and Boards of Valuation; Overseers of Roads and Rivers; ing one of his, and the other hold of her trusty Commissioners of Wrecks; Tobacco Pickers and Coopers.

Bereaved Homes .- Since the commencement of this unhallowed war, the death angel has gathered many a gem from the mother's casket, and from his dusky wings, as he hovered over the camp of the brave, the fatal poison has fallen on many a son of hope, about whose person the tendrils of parental affection had fondly entwined. Yet, when the hour of weeping grief has passed, and the wounded spirit is able to lisp, "he died of Gold, by a Southern Lady; Evenings at the Micro-scope, &c., &e.
