THE DEVIL'S VISIT TO "OLD ABE." BY REV. E. P. BIRCH, OF LA GRANGE, CA. Written on the occasion of Lincoln's Proclamation for Prayer and Fasting after the battle of Manassas. Revised and improved on pressly for the La Grange Reporter by the author.

Pressing of the Lat Groupe Reporter, by the author.

Old Abe was sitting in his chair of State.

With one foot on the mante and one on the grate, Now smoking his pipe, and then scratching his pare. For he had heard some desastrous news of late, As fearful as death and as cruel as fate in an old earthern jug, on a table near by.

Was a gallon of "Buck-eye," or "Choice old Ryu," To cheer up his hopes which were ready to die. Under whose potent charms old Abe would be able. To lay all his griets, like a bill, "on the table."

To lay all his griets, like a bill, "on the table."

Or, shut up his woe, like a horse, in a stable. He sat in his chair.

With a wo-begone air.

Gezing at nothing with a meaningless stare. And looked like a wild beast just "skeered" in his latt. His cheek bones were high, and his visage was rough. Like a middling of bacon--all wrinkled and tough. His nose was as long, and as ugly and big. As the snout of a hair starved lilinois pig. He was long in the legs, and long in the face. A Longfellow born of a long-legged race. Yet longing thro grace, for a mident longer space. "Till he d finished his political wild-goose chase—fringing wreck on his country, and endless disgrase on the blockheads who'd placed him in "the very wrong place." The news had just reached him of rout and defeat, Of his "Grand Army" broken—of desastrous retreat; His best men were slain on the field of the fight. signed at the Company's Office in the City of Raleigh

His treasury was bankrupt, his finances amashed;
His credit was gone, and his bills were uncashed;
His country with terrible foos still begirt.
Was tumbling to ruin like a fabric of dirt;
"I'm a tread," said old Abe, "there's somebody hurt."
Thus sitting and thinking—
Twixt smoking and thinking—
Twixt smoking and drinking—
His head on his bosom was gradually sinking.
When a sound met his ear—
So sharp and so clear,
That he sprang to his feet—standing breathless to hear,
With his thind full of oread, and his heart full of fear,
"Twas not like the roil of the hurricane's thunder,
Nor the earthquake that cleaves the tail mountains asunder.
Twas not like the storms which tumultuously sweep
O'er the lone bending woods and the dark rolling deep.
But a sharp, angry crashing,
A confusion and clashing;
Like things in general, promiscuously smashing,
"It's the bevill" thought Abe, in the sorest of frights,
Or a rebel "masked battery," on "Arlington Heights."
On the wings of the midnight winds it flew,
And nearer it came and louder it grew,
"Till Washington City seemed all in a stew.
It paused just before
The "White House" door,
And then died away with an explosive roar.
"It's the Devill" said Lincoln, and sure he's right.
For just at that moment there givenied on his sight.
The glare of a horrible sulphurous light,
Encircting a form so ghastry and grim.
That his heart ceased to beat and his eyes grew dim

For just at that moment there gleamed on his sight. The glaze of a horrible sulphurous light, Encircling a form so ghastly and grim.
That his heart ceased to beat and his eyes grew dim. That form stood before him modestic and dread. With large cloven feet, and huge horns on his head. With large cloven feet, and huge horns on his head. With large cloven feet, and huge horns on his head. With large cloven feet, and huge horns on his head. With large cloven feet, and large horns on his head. With large cloven feet, and large horns on his head. And the bones in his skin was rattling and shaking.

Like the "dry bones" in the "Valley of Vision," With such a dreadful collision.

As threatened to make a "long division" of his body and members, "without legal decision." "How's your heatin, Mr. Lincoin?" said old Nick with a grin; "I have only stepped in "I have only

You, yourself," said the fiend, with a wink of his eye

Of a demagogue crew who own my direction.
I invented your platform, and gove it eclat.
About "niggers," and 'freedom,' and the great 'higher law.'
From the top of this platform—outstretching below,
I showed you the Kingdoms which I would bestow,
If you and your party would only agree
To fall down in worship and homage to me;
Obey my directions, fulfill my commands,
Spread carnage and death ever all these lands,
By a horrible warfare, such as would win
Siccess to my cause, and a triumph to sin.
To all these terms you most promptly agreed,
And made them your grounds of political creed.
I gave you my subjects—the best I have got,
Such as Cameron, and Seward, and 'O'd Granny Scott,'
Assisted by Greeley and Bennett and Weed,
As miserable scounders as Tophet could breed.
To fix up a plan for 'preserving the Union,'
In the bonds of a happy fraternal communion,
By a terrible warfare of conquest and blood,
Such as never was known since the day of the flood.
I gave you my minions from the purileus of hell.
The ranks by your feerful scread gray to a weelf.

gave you my minions from the purlieus of hell.
The ranks of your fearful grand army to swell.
The ranks of your fearful grand army to swell.
I stirred up the North with its vagabond crew.
And set which-burning Yankeedom all in a stew.
With its isms and schisms—funation trappings—
Its feed out its teachers.
I called out its teachers.

I called out its teachers.

(Hypocritical preachers)
And demapogue screechers.
To marshal your legions to conquest and fame:
But alast to your shame.
No victory came.
But repreach and diagrace on the whole Yankee name.
Your armies went forth, but not to the battle;
They went forth to plunder the fields of their cattle;
To steal the young chickens and capture the hens.
(Like William Come Trimble Toe,') and put 'em im pensin the pages of history, no lofter place
Can be claimed for your theiring and cowardly race,
Than to sell they were valuant in stealing a hen,
But ran in confusion from the presence of men.
When at last your Grand Army was forced in a fight,
They were routed, defeated, and driven in flight.
Overwhelm'd with confusion, from the plains of Manassas,
Like a miserable pack of terrified asses.
Was it for this that I labored with vigilant toil,
To sow tares of contention all over your soil!—
To build me your defers with type preferations.

Was it for this that I labored with vigilant toil,
To sow tares of contention all over your soil?—
To build up your plarty with lying pretensions,
With demagogue tricks, and Chicago Conventions?
If this is the fruit of my labor and zeal,
I am sure I deserve the remorse that I feel,
For becoming the tool
Of a shallow-brained fool,
With the form of an ape and the head of a calf—
It is sowing the whirliwind and reaping the chaff.
What say you to this?" cried old Nick, waxing hot;
Quoth President Lincoin, "You must ask Gen. Scott."
"Old Scott's an old ass and Seward to boot;
And, as for yourself, you're a pluful brute,
Too mean to let live and too worthless to shoot.
But to come to the point more directly in hand,
Allow me once more in good faint to demand
The grounds of this plifful vile proclamation. Allow me once more in good faith to demand
The grounds of this pitful vile proclamation.
The grounds of this pitful vile proclamation.
To fasting and prayer by the whole Yankee nation.
To you think that Jehovah will favor your cause,
While you murder and steal and violate laws?
Will your prayers be heard when you ask the Eternal,
For help to accomplish your objects inferna!
No; this war, like yourself, was begotten in sin,
And lose it or win.
You must now begin.
To fight with the spirit of 'Seventy-Six,'
And abandon your pitful Yankee tricks."
Out of the procession and sin:
"You are right, now, for once," said old Nick with a grin,
"But such are the fruits of transgression and sin:
Then where lies the blame? Not with me, I am sure.
You made the disease; you must seek for the cure.
And, now, in conclusion, your strention I call

Thus saying he left in a moment of time.

And wound up his speech, where I wind up my rhyme;
He left General Scott in a passion and worry— Old Abe in a fit, and his wife in a flurry.
