O Just out of the village we reached the residence of Mr. Hunter, a member of the Virginia Senate, which Gen. Banks occupied as headquarters last year. It is a large elegant house, with ample grounds. Of course the owner was not there to welcome us. But the rebel guns were planted, fell in the village, cutting roofs and knocking down chimneys, but injuring none of the citizens. At noon, we entered the village, and for the fifth time during the war Charlestown is occupied by National troops. But how different our reception from that given us in Frederick, Sharpsburg, and Pans, Railroad work, Steamboat work, and jobbing in other Maryland towns. Not a flag flying except general, will receive prompt attention.
