A Story about General Bragg .- A corres pondent of the Mobile Advertiser, writing from Shelbyville, says:

[NO. 1234.]

An officer in Gen. Bragg's army had obtained a short leave of absence to permit him to go home and attend to personal interests demanding his presence. Before his time of absence had expired he requested a further leave of absence for thirty days, and promised to return a better sol-THE undersigned have taken the Agency for the sale of Messes. W. B. Persons in want of Grind Stones will please correspond with the undersigned, who will fill orders promptly and guarantee the quality of the thirty days' time granted had expired, he again forwarded a communication desiring a still further leave. His officers were astonished at his impudence and audacity, and each one in turn through whose bands it passed marked it "disap proved." Before the communication reached army headquarters, General Bragg was the recipient of a letter from this officer, who stated which he enclosed. This delicate missive contained a sad and touching farewell to the young officer who had gained her affections. She exwas in different circumstances. With this state of things existing, hard as she felt would be the trial to her, she had determined to release the object of her affections from an engagement made in her prosperity. This noble missive was couched in such loving and gentle, though prudent and touching language, that it might well have drawn tears from the iron warrior to whom it was presented. The officer added that the misfortunes of his affianced had only the more endeared her to him, and this manifestation of her disinterested love and spirit had only inspired a stonger affection for so noble a woman. He desired a still further holiday that he might go to her and marry her, proving that his love was as pure as her own, and by making her his wife endow his property upon her in case he was made the victim of a bullet. Gen. Bragg sent directions to his bureau officer to send him the communication as soon as it should arrive, and regardless of the endorsement of "disapproved" made by officers unaware of the circumstances, he marked it "granted for thirty days," and endorsed upon the letter, "The lady is worthy of the best and bravest soldier, and from what I learn I believe you are worthy of the lady. Camp Joke .- A correspondent of the Savannah Republican tells the following:-A good story is told on Maj. Rylander. When his battalion joined Gen. Anderson's brigade, he loved to show off their perfection in the drill, and had them out very often. Large crowds from the other regiments collected to witness the performance, and out of a spirit of mischief would ease the Major by hollowing, "hurrah for Major Laplander! That's a good manœuvre for Major Lowlander! Wheel 'em again, Maj Greenlander!' The Major feeling himself aggrieved, made com-

"They call me "Old Tige," and I don't get mad about it. I can't stop their fun, and don't The Major went away looking like he wished he had not made complaint. The Black Flag .- "The exact count of prisoners thus far taken during the battle of Sunday is not known, but must be, all told, nearly if not quite ten thousand. They were brought in singly, in squads and in regiments, and our men soy they could have taken many more but for the rouble of bothering with them on the field. THEY

Not content with the invasion of our soil, the capture be their game, let us see who will make most out of it. A Candid Witness .- A correspondent of the Milwaukie News writing from Arkansas, gives ders No. 37, from the Adjutant and Inspector General's some very strong testimony as to the influence and result of Yankee meddling and effects on the condition and prospects of the Negro. Writing from Helena, Ark., he says: "With no one to care for them, without food, clothes or medicine, they sicken and die here hy the hundreds-freed at last. Back of Gen. Washburn's headquarters, but a short distance, is a peach orchard, the graves in rows so close that one can hardly step between them. Here, about two feet under ground, are over 1,000 dead negroes, and day after day others who have starved to death are being added to the nameless list. And there are a dozen negro grave yards in Helena, each being rapidly filled with negroes, who were once happy and contented, in health and cared for, of use to themselves and the world."

A Paper Extinguisher .- The New York Herald says that Gen. Hascall, commanding the district of Indiana, has ordered the Columbus City (Indiana) News to be stopped for criticising one of his orders. Hascall suppressed a journal some days ago because the editor called him a 'donkey, and another because the printer commenced his Commissioners of Appraisement for N. C. name with an "R" instead of "H," which was only a typographical error.
