REMARKABLE DISCOVERY IN ENGLAND.

At Runcorn, England, while a dam was being sunk for a bridge across the river, a discovery was made of the highest historical importance, and which may lead to more information respect-ing a period of which little is known, vis: that immediately succeeding the first arrival of the Saxons in Britain. The discovery was made in the following manner, written to the Liverpool Mar-cury by J. P. Ashton, a well-known antiquary:

"On the 27th instant, while sinking one of our caissons, an obstacle was met with which defied the pressure exercised by our sinking apparatus. Divers were sent down, who, on removing a quantity of sand from about the base of the caleson, reported the obstacle to be a large log of wood. By the help of a strong orane, and after removing draw it up to the staging, and found it not to be a log of wood, as the divers, misled by its general attrided state, had reported, but a large coffia-shaped box, of great strength, measuring about eight feet by three feet. The wood had become impregnated with oxide of iron from the red sandstone, which had made it as hard as iron itself, so that it was with the greatest difficulty that we were enabled to pry open the lid. The inside, which was roughly hewn to the shape of a human body, but with a large additional space at the head, was lined with a whitish, bitaminous substance, and contained the body of a man in a most wonderful state of preservation. It is attired in the dress of a wealthy Roman citisen, the tunic and toga both white, embroidered with purple and gold threads, the toga fastened with a handsome golden fibula. The straps of the buskins are studded with little golden bosses. Attuched to the girdle are a tablet and a goldenhilted stylus. The tout ensemble, in fact, while not glaring, is rich and tasteful. "The body, though in civil dress, appears to be that of a legionary officer, as a large military cloak is swathed round it, and by its side are a short sword (the famous Roman 'gladium'), with its belt, a javelin and a vinea, such as centurions used to preserve discipline among the men. A fine cnyx signet ring, bearing the letters 'S. P. Q. R, and the figure of a wolf, is on the finger. This I conjecture to be a symbol of authority delegated by the Roman Senate, or the then reigning Emperor, to the bearer. The sword and pelt also bear the initials 'S. P. Q. R.' The head of the vinca is shaped into a rude resemblance to a Roman esgle.

"The body has been embalmed in so skillful manner as to preserve, even after this lapse of time, the features tolerably distinct; but it is excessively fragile, crumbing at a touch; in fact, it has only been preserved from total destruction by the mantle, and by a quantity of a cryptogemic plant, allied to the ommon equisetum, which is packed round it, keeping it steady and immovable in the coffin.

"I farbee giving a more detailed account, and the space above the h tity of the equisctum like herb sustains uninjured an amphera of coarse earthenware, with a yellow. vincous glaze. The handles and neak are brokon off, and inside it is placed-also with packing -a beautifully-executed cinerary urn of red Semain ware, containing ashes and a small roil of vellum covered with characters which I am unable to decimer, but which Phelieve to be Saxon. Sprinkled tarough the scroll I, however find the Roman name "Q Sulpicius, Piso," the initials "S. P. Q R, ' the words "legatus," "orematio," "manes," "lares," and a few others. This scroll I therefore imagine to hold the key of the enigma presented by the many anomalus appearances I have described and am about to describe.

"In the amphora, beneath the urn, are a number of ernaments of gold and silver, such as were worn by Saxou females of rank; among them is a kind of rude looket, containing a long trees of glossy yellow hair. The ornaments appear to be a set, as if they had belonged to one person; and this fact, coupled with the presence of the hair, leads me to suppose the askes contained in the urn to be these of the owner both of them and

"The amphora also contains a small racket of coins, nearly one hundred in number, of which forty three are gold, and of the reigns of the Roman emperors Honorius, dating A. D. 410, a iew of Hadrian, Antonius and Severus, with earlier dates. The remaining coins are silver, probably Saxon, but owing to their mutilated and defaced condition, I am unable to say positively. Os ons only is a date visible, namely, 465. "From these dates, as well as from the Saxon orosments, I am inclined to refer the romains to about the date of the first arrival of the Saxons in Britain. The corpse may be that of one of the last emissaries of Rome to this island -or, as history speaks of no political intercourse between Rome and our island at that period, he may have been connected with a religious, not a civil, mission. The ashes I surmise to be those of a Saxon female. But how shall we account for the presence of the remains of a Roman and a Saxon in a common tome? More strange still is the embalming of the Roman and the cremation of the Saxon. The position of the comin in the bed of the river is also strange; but an overturned boat and the shifting sands may account for this. Possibly the scroil found in the urn may give an explanation of this, and until this has been deciphered we must be content to remain in the dark. I have been instructed, in case no claim is made for the remains as 'treasure trove,' to send the whole in their present condition to the British Museum about the beginning of next week."

A Summary of Burbridge's expedition to the Salt Works.—A correspondent of the Philadel-phis Inquirer, in a letter from James river, says: "A number of men (between thirty and forty, I believe,) belonging to Burbridge's command, captured at Saltville on the 21 in tant, were among the prisoners who arrived to-day by flagof trace from Richmond. One of them-s gentleman of the Teutonic persuasion-gave me his opinion on the result of that, in a somewhat laconic style: "We gets not mooch salt dere," said he, "but we gets peppered like der tuyfel."

Sensible.-A loyal woman has written an able paper on the crisis, in which she protests against killing off all the men. She says:

"I do not believe in fighting for the country and the flag to the last man; and it seems to me any body is an idiot who talks such nousense. What would the country be to me or any other woman if 'the last man' was gone?"
