But the Journal says: "Had the editor confined himself to a statement of his opinion we might have permitted it to pass without comment leaving to him the unenviable distinction of discarding the views of a Caldwell, a Maffit, a Gwynn, a Hawks, and a host of other men of intelligence who had given to this harbor a careful exof its capacity and eligibility, and of substituting the editor found himself surrounded."

we may be that the State would have been better of death. off had the foot of "a Gwynn" never been set upon its soil. But these venerable men are transaction of business connected with the apall mortal and all fallible, for nearly two years ago proaching campaign. we heard one of them predict the speedy concentration of a vast amount of capital, from other States, at the eastern terminus of this road, which prediction has not and never will be verified.

As to the revenue from the lower part of the road, we answer that our information is based entirely almost on observation. We know from what we see that there is but very little travel on the Road East of Newbern during Sor 9 months in the year, and we know too that freight trains frequently pass up and down the entire 35 miles without freight enough to pay for the wood consamed by the engine which leads the train. These things we know to be so for they come under our eyes. We have not called upon the officers of the road for statistical information, pre ferring to leave a meddlesome interference with their business to the editor of the Journal and others who were disappointed at the turn things took last June, and who have not yet recovered from the chagrin produced by that result. Pro bably if they could secure a Goldsboro' President and a Morehead City Directory they could manpeople of Craven and Lenoir will continue to it -

We still insist that "the Legislature made a great blunder in investing a cent of the State's money in a road East of Newbern," and we doubt not but that body will take steps to remedy that blunder as far as possible, at an early day, especially as there can be no hope that the business over that portion of the road can ever be increased. When the Legislature meets we are confident this whole matter will be discussed, and then, if spared, we expect to perform, as far as possible, our duty to our section and to the State, as a pubthe music of his own "organ" he can grind on. Bury Me in the Beep.

Bury me in the roaring deep, Where the raging winds do roar; Where the waves, their nightly revels keep, And beat against the shore, Give me a grave in the lonely deep,

Where naught can distract my rest; Where the waves will faithful oigies keep, That foam above my breast. Give me a grave in the briny deep,

Where the raging winds is heard: That the lone sea gull, as she o'er me sweeps, May chant my funeral dirge. There, alone, in the briny deep,

Let me undisturbed lie Until the last loud trump shall speak, To call me up on high. Then from my watery grave in the deep,

My renewed form shall arise; Rush through the waves that around me leap, To my distant home in the skies.
