WE surrender much of our editorial space to-day to the interesting account of the incidents connected with the great fire in Boston.

BE AT YOUR POSTS!

We respectfully urge upon the Democratic members elect to the Legislature the importance of being at their posts on Monday, the 18th, the first day of the session.

The work of organizing the two houses of the Legislature is of very great importance. The Radicals will be on hand to a man, and will take every advantage of the absence of our members. We have a good working majority, but it is not sufficiently large for any Democrats to be absent at roll call the first day of the session.

THE SMITH POISONING CASE. The particulars of the death of Rev J. Brinton Smith, D. D., have been given minutely through our local columns, and we do not propose to recapitulate them to-day. We will merely give a general statement of the facts in order to make a few comments thereon, as a subject of so grave importance cannot well be passed over in silence.

Dr. Smith died on the first day of October last. On the morning of that day, he drank a dose of Seidlitz powders which was administered to him, at his request, by his daughter, Mrs. Frances L. Mann. A few moments after taking the powders, the Doctor was taken suddenly ill and was attacked with convulsions. In less than half an hour he was a corpse.

poisoned, a post mortem examination was made by several eminent physicians of this city. The result of that examination was not made public, but it was decided to send the stomach of the de-Philadelphia, for chemical analysis, and ley falls largely behind Merrimon, show to get his opinion for the guidance of the Jury of Inquest. The Coroner who took the stomach to Dr. Genth, carried the tin box containing the other Seidthe medicine and a glass jar of sugar out of which the powder had been sweetened.

Dr. Genth first examined by careful tests the sugar contained in the glass powders.

these contained any strychnine or any metallic poison.

He then directed his attention to the empty powder wrappers, including the white and blue papers which had contained the acid powder and the soda. He found a little white powder adhering to the blue paper which, after being subjected to several chemical tests, developed the most characteristics of strychnine, which no other known substance gives. He therefore pronounces the white powder adhering to the blue paper to be strychnine.

He next examined the spoon used in administering the dose which contained a trace of white powder and discovered that it contained characteristics strychnia.

His next step was to examine the tumbler which contained a part of the dose which Doctor Smith had swallewed, and after various tests, Dr. Genth entertains no doubt of the presence of strychnia in the tumbler.

The examination of the stomach was reserved for the last, and having failed to find, by numberless experiments, Prussic Acid, Arsenic, Antimony, Mercuay, Copper and Lead, he proceeded to make the necessary tests for Acaloids, MANY KILLED WITH FEAR. and from this investigation came to the conclusion that there was a trace of strychnia in the stomach, but in very small quantity."

The above conclusions are taken from Dr. Genth's lengthy report as furnished to the Jury of Inquest on the 11th inst, who after considering the same and other evidence in the case, agreed upon the following verdict as published by us this morning :

"That the deceased J. Brinton Smith came to his death on the morning of the following interesting account and the 1st day of October 1872 from the incidents of the great Boston fire. Our effects of strychnine, administered by late Northern entemporaries scarcely Frances S. Mann, and that Mary E. speak of anything else, and the whole Smith was the custodian of a key of the editorial column's of the last New York and lounges Another lady, whose closet in which was found a vial of said | Herald were exclusively devoted to arti poisonous drug."

Mrs. Mann and Mrs. Smith, the for- gration : mer the daughter and the latter the wife of the deceased, were arrested on Tuesday afternoon under warrant of the Coroner, and were committed to the now held, pending an application for a writ of Heabeas Corpus, which has been Halifax Superior Court.

The comments we shall make upon this subject shall be brief. The circumstances' attending this extraordinary that when the flames burst from the breakfast away with them and, if necescase have caused a deep feeling in our roof, brands, burning splinters, and cessary, to have their regular meal on community.

ege (colored) and an able and distinguished Episcopal minister. He was a geutleman of rare intellectual endowments and of the finest conversational gifts, and had many friends and admirers in this City.

His wife and daughter, who are now charged with his murder, shared in the confidence and esteem which were telt for the deceased, and no breath of suspicion had ever been breathed against them. Their present situation has excited a deep feeling of pity and sympathy, and notwithstanding the circumstances of suspicion by which under Providence they have been surrounded, they have many friends who have the utmost confidence in their entire innecence and believe they will be tramphantly vindicated when all the evidence is brought out.

It is a maxim of our law that every man is presumed to be innocent until he is shown to be guilty, and when two helpless women, who have stood high in the community, whose characters are irreproachable, are charged with the heinous crime of poiscning their own father and husband, whatever may be the prima facie case against them, the voice of humanity bids us to beware of hasty conclusions of their guilt, but to await developments with the confident hope that the clouds of distrust and suspicion may disappear before the light of truth and justice.

There was no limit to the goods lost in this way, nor could the police, vigilant as it was, prevent the EXCITING SCENES AMONG THE robbery, for owners could not be told from thieves. Carts and trucks, dragged by men and horses, passed and jammed their way along, breaking boxes and upsetting in their passage, and making with the glare of the light, no bad picture of what pandemonium must be. On their heads the blazing buildings dropped great gouts and flakes of fire, as though from the fingers of a bloody hand dipped in brimstone. The stones cracked and fell hissing with the water that had been showered upon them, and the iron bent and doubled upon itself in long loops. The houses while being gutted were great cauldrons from which the fire darted and bubbled up, roaring above the noise of the engines working below, and filling the heavens with its crimson light.
