PERSIMMONS. - About sunrise last Saturday, as the down train from Charlotte passed Cary, a dilapidated old darkey was seen in his shirt-sleeves sitting on the fence not far from the depot. From the car window a passenger inquired, "I say, mister, has the frost killed the cotton ?" The reply of the old darkey was short, touching, and to the point . "Boss, I don't want to be considered sassy, but all I'se got to says is, d-d the cotton. This allusion to persimmons stirred up within us recollections of our campaigning in old Virginia during the late misunderstanding On more than one occasion this much abused fruit has been a delicious morsel to our longing abdomen. Just at this moment a little incident occurs to our mind which we will relate: It was on the 15th of November, 1864, after a weary march, we halted not far from Winchester to cook and eat our scant rations, and to prepare for an attack by the enemy's cavalry which were near at hand. Our keen and hungry eyes espied in the distance a veritable Persimmon tree, and taking it as an objective point off we started at a creditable speed for a broken down, foot sore soldier. We arrived in due time in the other Israelites were before us. Our colonel, three captains, five lieutenants, and two gentlemen in dishabille, who had no ensignia of rank whereby to spot them, two Virginia female field hands and about a dozen or so non-commissioners officers and privates were already there and hard at work. A littie abushed, but nothing daunted, up the tree we went, but hardly had a lodgement been effected, and grasp, when a sharp snap was heard, and in less time than it takes to tell it, a mass of writhing humanity was precipitated to the ground, a distance of some 25 feet. Heaven watched over us and we were lodged unhurt on top of a portly quartermaster who, for the time being, had the wind knocked out What has become of the postoffice of him. We made good use of our time while resting on the yielding carcass of this fat functionary. In his pockets there was a good supply of the luscious fruit, which was rapidly transferred to ours. Just as our robbery was complete and consciousness returned to the Q. M., Sheridan's cavalry bugles were heard gently playing in the distance and approaching with a rapid-

Is THERE NO REMEDY?-Sunday night, March the 30th, a party of four men left Raleigh bound for Yanceyville, the county seat of Caswell, to attend the session of the Superior Court. It was a mixed party, badly mixed. An Insurance Agent headed the list. He was the oldest man and had the most to say. The second best was a prominent Guano man trom Baltimore. A Raleigh Medicine man was the third, dence of the chosen Queen, and thence and a newspaper man about our size brought up the rear. On the trip the insurance man severely drummed his companions for a life policy. At 10 o'clock all retired, after a lengthy discussion as to which two should occupy one bed. The insurance man said he preferred to be alone; the guano man insisted that he could not sleep with a man, the medicine man said he could, the newspaper was agreeable, and the two latter "went for" quarters on the largest bed of the three. The light was extinguished, and soon all were asleep except the newspaper man, who heard the insurance man soundly at it. A quiet stillness pervaded the guano man's corner, and the medicine man seemed so far gone that it would take at least two bottles of his liniment, well rubbed in, even to arouse him-but not so; for just at that mcment a rap was made at the door, and and said, "I have a gentleman to put | Vienna exhibition. in that room." This aroused the guano man, who suggested that this party had stopped taking in. A quick short snort over in the direction of the insurance man, and he was awake.
