

THE CHOLERA IN TENNESSEE -WARNING TO OUR CITY AUTHORITIES.

The appearance of the cholera in the cities of Nashville and Memphis has caused considerable alarm throughout the country and the probability of its extending to other points is causing much discussion in the papers, both North and South.

For two weeks the New York World has been exposing the dangers which lurk in the diseased atmosphere of that city—an atmosphere impregnated with poisonous gases generated by a defective sewerage system, and with deadly vapors arising from filthy streets.

The disclosures made by the World are having a most salutary effect in arousing the authorities to the importance of taking sanitary measures to guard the city against pestilence and the local diseases incident to the Summer season.

From the accounts in the Nashville papers, it is certain that the cholera originated there because of the defect of sanitary regulations. The disease is confined to the most unhealthy portion of the city—a point where foul and pestilential odors are emitted. The physicians say that with the proper sanitary renovation of the city the cholera would be suppressed in a very short time.

We have heard great complaints by several of our citizens of the filthy condition of the streets of Raleigh. Attention has frequently been called to this matter in our local columns. Those whose official duty it is to see that sanitary measures are enforced have a grave responsibility on their hands.

The sickly season is approaching. The health of Raleigh will depend to a very great extent upon the manner in which the city authorities shall preserve cleanliness throughout the limits of their jurisdiction. Let them take warning by the fate of Nashville and Memphis—whose citizens are rushing in great alarm and excitement from their infected homes, to escape the dangers of a fatal contagion. If the cholera should visit Raleigh this season it will be attributed to the causes given by the physicians of Nashville and Memphis—defective sanitary regulations.

VIRGINIA POLITICS.

We are gratified to see the unanimity with which our Virginia Conservative exchanges have taken all minor issues, and are now battling together in a common cause. Local squabbles have been subordinated to the public good. Railroad quarrels have been suspended and a truce proclaimed.

Upon the whole, it may be set down as a splendid failure and a most untimely production. Gov. Wise's position has caused many of his personal friends the most poignant regret, who, while they utterly repudiate many of the sentiments in his letter, still treat the eccentric old gentleman with the respect due to his former services to the State.

The vigor, the good feeling, the unanimity, and the resolute tone of our Virginia cotemporaries, afford the highest evidence that when the crisis comes they will fall into line with promptness and zeal and concentrate their united fire upon the strongholds of the enemy.

We have the strongest hopes that the nominee of the Conservative party, whoever he may be, will win the fight and preserve our sister State from the clutches of Radical coramants and political iconoclasts.

The Modocs who deserted Jack and tracked him to his strong-hold, are, as it appears from to-day's dispatches, to be treated with leniency, while Jack himself and those who stood faithfully by his fortunes, will be tried by a Military Commission, which is but another name for a Court Martial.

THE REWARD OF THE RENEGADES—THE MILITARY COMMISSION.

The Modocs who deserted Jack and tracked him to his strong-hold, are, as it appears from to-day's dispatches, to be treated with leniency, while Jack himself and those who stood faithfully by his fortunes, will be tried by a Military Commission, which is but another name for a Court Martial.

The Commission has already been organized and will soon enter upon its work. The trial will be short, sharp and decisive. Jack and his comrades will be found guilty of course, and then his late will depend upon the President.

Military Commissions are always organized to convict, and as Jack's case presents some stronger points than poor Mrs. Suratt's, we all know what the verdict will be in advance.

Many of the ablest papers in the land have taken issue with Attorney General Williams, and deny the authority of the Government to organize a Military Commission to try the Modocs. Therefore, if Jack is convicted and sentenced we trust he will sue out a writ of Habeas Corpus and try the legality of the military Court.

If Jack is to die, let him die according to the law of the land, and not by an unauthorized and illegal tribunal.

Hooker Jim, and Steamboat Frank, and Bogus Charley and the other Modoc traitors who deserted their countrymen, are guilty of the most heinous crimes against the settlers, and it would be a singular freak of justice for them to be pardoned, while others perhaps less guilty are made to suffer the extreme penalty of the law.

HEROISM OF THE DAUGHTERS OF NORTH CAROLINA.

We copy elsewhere in our columns today, from the advance sheets of "Our Living and Our Dead," an account of an incident that transpired during the war, near Kingston, which illustrates the devoted patriotism of the noble daughters of North Carolina.

The world has never witnessed higher examples of female heroism than those displayed by the women of the South during the four years struggle between the two sections of our country.

Proud and honorable as is the record of our soldiers—the dauntless heroes of a cause which emboldened their valor, history will yet reserve its brightest, purest pages for the angelic deeds of our matchless women, whose devotion during the war is only equalled by their efforts since, to keep fresh in memory the deeds of our fallen braves by honoring their sacred dust.

GEN. ROSS' DENIAL.

Gen. Ross denies that his Oregon militia committed the dastardly and fiendish act of putting to death several of the Modoc prisoners.

The Government expresses considerable indignation over the disgraceful outrage. The Secretary of War thinks it was perpetrated by outlaws who have made good their escape.

At the time the dispatch was received containing the news of the massacre, we stated that the perpetrators were guilty of a greater crime than the murderers of Canby and Thomas. The New York World of the 10th inst., has the following on the subject:

"The savagery is not all with the Modocs. In deliberate and cowardly atrocity the massacre of Modoc prisoners by white men yesterday was fully equal to the murder of General Canby by the Modocs. Not one of the murdered Modocs was even accused of complicity with that crime. Not one of them, as far as appears, was accused, even by rumor, of any crime deserving death. It was mere lust of slaughter that impelled men who had been proved unable to beat the Modocs in battle to murder them while they were under the protection of the power which these white men had invoked. There is nothing more cowardly or more cruel in the whole history of border warfare than this slaughter of peaceful prisoners."

For whatever crime these prisoners committed, it does not appear committed, and it committed any—they were on their way to be tried before a tribunal which was certain to award them the severest punishment they could be shown to have deserved. There was no excuse and no palliation for the massacre. It concerns the honor of the nation, already soiled many times in the bungling conduct of this miserable Modoc business, to see that the murderers are caught and convicted and punished. They can be found and identified without the shadow of a doubt, unless the Federal officers in Oregon are as slack about pursuing them as they have been in pursuing the chief disgrace of this war will rest, not upon the savages who murdered Canby, but upon the nation which permitted prisoners under its protection to be murdered by men who could not plead for themselves the excuses of ignorance and barbarism which can be pleaded for the murderers of Canby. And if the neighbors of these men uphold their detestable deed, the extermination of white frontiersmen will become a far more necessary and desirable end than the extermination of Indian murderers."

ADVANCE SHEET OF "OUR LIVING AND OUR DEAD."

We acknowledge the receipt of a copy of the advance sheet of "Our Living and Our Dead," from which we learn that the first regular issue of the publication will appear July the first.

The first issue will contain some memorial verses, a sketch of John W. Ellis—North Carolina's first war Governor, introductory sketches of the causes which brought on the War, Chronological Record of Events from January 1st, 1861, to May 20th, 1871, Anecdotes of Officers and Men, and Editorial Summary.

We make the following extract from the "Editorial Explanation and Appeal" in the advance sheet before us:

"Before a nobler audacity than listened to, the editor of Our Living and Our Dead appears this day, impelled by filial duty to his mother, North Carolina, to commence the recital of the heroic deeds of her sons in a struggle second to none in the annals of history or on the glowing pages of the poet. He, too, might exclaim, 'A sense of obligation to thee, O North Carolina, and to thy brave sons, forces me to revive great sorrow—to tell of immense sufferings, of heroic struggles and brilliant victories, in a vain, against overwhelming odds, of thousands slain, or named in useless attempts to secure rights of individuals and of States, of bravery unparalleled, and of sufferings unequalled—all to end in disaster and defeat, and in the loss of everything for which they bled and died.' As the memory of these recalled the great achievements of his countrymen, national pride thrilled every fibre of his soul, and though he knew that the heroic deeds he recounted, culminated only in ruin and death, yet exultingly he proclaimed these deeds while the listening Queens and noble Carthaginians applauded the actions of those whom he extolled. As, from time to time, the editor, in plain, unvarnished prose, shall recall the virtues and the heroism of the gallant men who died for North Carolina on a hundred battlefields, made glorious by their valor, State pride and kindred lineage will cause the blood to tingle warmly through the veins of all true sons and daughters of the State, who feel that these were their countrymen, these the fathers, brothers and husbands of their love.

Conscientiously, he knows, and faithfully, he trusts, the work shall be done. Intentionally, no scene shall be overdrawn, no picture too highly colored, no skirmish or battle untruthfully described. Justice to North Carolina soldiers demands only a plain statement of actual occurrences. Embellishments are unnecessary, and falsehoods are not required to bolster up doubtful reputations. Without disparagement of others, the editor can and will show that the government and people of his native State have been nearly up to the standard which duty had erected, as that of any other, and that the officers and privates whom she sent to the front, by their conduct, in camp and on the battle fields of a four years sanguinary contest, proved themselves worthy of a renown as imperishable as her own mountains, as bright and as glorious as the blue dome of heaven which is above her. When this is done, his labor of love will be complete, and every aspiration of his soul will be gratified.

Citizens of North Carolina, lovers of the good Old North State, he invokes your aid and co-operation in this great undertaking. Brother soldiers, who have survived the shock of arms, who cannot have been cast into alumnus or church bells, or serve as trophies of the victory of might over right, whose swords have been turned into ploughshares, and whose bayonets have been changed into pruning hooks, who have nothing left of the great struggle but wounds and scars, and the proud memory of duty fully performed, and a knowledge of the great achievements of your comrades in arms, confidently he appeals to you to assist him in doing justice to our living and our dead."

News had been received at headquarters at Kingston in November 1862, that two Generals of the Federal army, one of them commanding in North Carolina, would on a certain day pass from Morehead to Newbern. It was advisable, in view of contemplated movements, to capture the train and secure the officers. At 10 p. m., I received orders to proceed at once to Trenton, take a detail of men from Major Nethercut's command, and, if possible, on the day named, capture the train. At 3 a. m., I reached Trenton to find Major Nethercut absent on one of his usual scouting expeditions. Awaiting his return at daylight, I made myself comfortable, and was about to indulge in a morning's nap when the clatter of the feet of a horse, at full gallop, caused me to step to the door of the Court House to see what was in the wind. The sentinel upon duty had halted the rider; and was receiving from him a paper to be delivered immediately to the officer in command. To my astonishment the note bore no address, and upon being opened the blank page which it contained, I saw that it was a countryman unknown to me, was breathing his jaded horse preparatory to return, but could give no other information than this: About 1 o'clock a. m., he was aroused from his slumbers, and on going to his door found a lady on horseback who gave him the note, and told him to take it, at full speed, to Trenton and give it to any Confederate officer he should find on duty there, as it contained important information. In a few moments thereafter, I was in the private room of a citizen of Trenton and his kind wife was warming an iron for my use. Applied to the seemingly blank sheet of paper, heat soon enabled me to see what I desired. Foster had returned two days sooner than anticipated, and was to leave that very morning, with a force most accurately detailed on the sheet before me, on an expedition, having, in my opinion, the railroad bridge at Weldon for its objective point. The object of my expedition being thus frustrated, I returned immediately to Kingston, and gave the information I had procured through the intrepid daring of one of Newbern's daughters to the officer in command. Steps were promptly taken by the General Commanding the Department, and such an array of troops was placed in front and upon the flanks of the Federal General as caused him rapidly to retrace his steps. The lady's name appended to that note has never been told—her secret has been locked in my breast—my superior officer respecting my motive in desiring to keep it, only requiring my pledge that I would write him worthy of credit. I doubt whether the writer of that note ever knew into whose hands it fell, or the good it accomplished. When I state that she was a young lady, tenderly reared and then in the very morning of maidenhood, her night ride at great personal risk, to convey useful information, can be properly appreciated.
