WILLIAM A. GRAHAM,

On the other hand, there had been for years and on the North a party organization, not numerous in numbers, but active in its operations...

Either of the contending parties was accustomed to tolerate very considerable aberrations and even heresies against its creed, to acquire or preserve party ascendancy, or to achieve success in a Presidential election, to which latter object no concessions and no sacrifices were deemed excessive...

Between these excited parties, Mr. Badger stood approved by neither. As far back as the Revolution, when the struggle for the independence of the United States was in progress...

His public career was but an episode in his life, which, not having seemed to him, as a man of political science, to which he had devoted his life...

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA.

THOMAS DEBARRIEN.

Raleigh, July 20th, 1866.

John Zenger, Esq., Raleigh, N. C.

DEAR SIR:—Very respectfully requesting your views "whether there was, before the passage of the ordinance authorizing the conveyance of State lands into national hands, any understanding that the State control of those lands would be retained with its interest."

Under the above mentioned act, "my opinion will influence the action of many." I feel some diffidence in expressing that opinion, but as a doubt in regard to the validity of the ordinance, in the contingency of a change of State policy, will be injuriously affected their views...

I have been thus tedious in review of the history of this period, because it was upon topics arising out of this great subject of controversy, ever uppermost in the public mind...

Very Respectfully,
