THE SOUTH AND THE PRESIDENCY -S. of the most unit ential Southern papers deblate emploitically that, as between a war democrat and speace democrat, in connection with the semistrate nomination for the Presidency, the South has no choice, ber preference being note for the most avail able condulate, without a territor to his What the Bearb wrahes is to nulscedenta see the radical candidate_defeated, and if that can be done more effectually by a man who has met the South on the battle-field support that man in the nominating Convention. It looks strange to see Southern journals emphatically rebuking those demoeratic journals in the North which declare that they will support no man who was connected with the war, as well as the opposite faction, which say they wiff support a copperhead for the Presidency. This indicates that the South feels that i is not her welfare or happiness which is consulted in a course which, by the div-sions it must produce, must inevitably hand it over to radical rule for another four years, and perhaps to indefinite prostration and minery .- Butt. At the Dry Tortogus the heads of the prisoners are shaved, and they labor uncer a tofrid sun upon a sand bank in the midst of the ocean, with balls and chains about their bmbs. The officers who command at the fortification are anienable to the laws of neither God nor man. Col. Grentel was tied up by his thumbs and treated with every species of cruelty and barbarity. No one interfered. The laws were silent. The man that enters there leaves liberty, justice and hope behind.
