THE BERGE THE TIMES

The history of civil wars attests the fact hal at the termination of such conflicts the word and meneral, and generally the most somet class or men, il sat along with the enfand ride temperarily into power. This further inct is as well attested, -that all such men are contemptible and dyspin d by all good men and even by men like iselves in their own day, and generamilland history writes them down as candalous, infamous and pests to huminitted the only while living to be excerated and after death to illustrate how low, contemptible and degraded men may become, The late civil war in this mountry affords another illustration of these general talths, and this is especially, so in the distance repdties South, . As a conjuguence of the war we find the worst, the meanest, the most infamous and generally the most ignorant and incompetent men in power and office. While there may be occasional exceptions. what we have said is generally true. Take a few examples in our own State to give point to what we have said. There is Gov." Holden. It is well known that he is wholly unreliable in matters of political principle and untrue to party or govern ment. The whole course of his life proves this. In the outset, he was a Whig, for the sake of success, he became a Democrat and a flerce and relentless secessionist and "fire exter." be persecuted Union men because they were such; he incited fire eating mobato drive good men from the State where they were born and raised and had a right to stay; he wrote and spoke for secession and did all in his power as the editor of the learling democratic journal, to precipitate the South into rebellion : he signed the or dinance of accession and said be would make it good with the "last man and the last dollar" he wrote and talked by the war after, through his aid, it had began he urged the young and gallant men of the country to fight for secession, to give their lives and fortunes for it; he even sent his own son into the war for the same purpose When the fortunes of secession began to s ane, he began to flinch ; in-lead, the was false to revenue then as he had before from false to the Union he professed at the close of the war when his country and State were overwholmed with rule and desolation through the very war which he thus helped to bring on in the interests of secession and the perpetuation of negro slavery, to repice at the overthrow of the South, accession and slavery, and joined the Union soldiery in demouncing the Southern soldiers and people as rebels and traitors, and protensed to execrate the very men whom he had always supported, and with whom he had uniformly co-operated politically to bring on the war. He not only execused such men, but he incited the Federal suthorities and government to persecute and proscribe these and such men; he not only conceded the gallantry of the Union troops, their patriotism and success and submitted under circumstances that do them dishogor. quietly to the success of the Union, but They will be thought of but seldom and be did all in his power to swell the triumph then only as a by word and represelt to the of the Federal soldiery, over his tallen State which gives them protects a and a a home. Mark the truth of this prediction. countrymen, whom he had incited to rebellion, and he denounced them as traitorous robels, deserving of extermination and ustracism. He boot-licked and worshiped President Johnson, and denounced everybody in his own State and the South who did not ... When Johnson manifested a disposition to encourage the South and lift up an impoverished people and make them feel and realize, that they were still American citizens, and for this was turned upon by the fierce passions of bad men, Holden turned upon him too, and denounced him as a traitor and urged his impeachment and disgrace. At first after the war, this man prevaricated about the pegro race and was not willing to allow him to vote or to testify in the Courts; but finding that he could only get into power by professing to worship the negro, he at once did so and rated him as the pranciple reliable element. in this State and the South and did all in his power to secure negro supremady, manifest'y to the end, that he might ride into power He now professes loyalty to the Union and the negro, and batted for rebeis and all the people, who will not say that he is a deserving and patriotic man and a true type of virtue and American citizenship. He daily misrepresents his own prople for the sake of gratihis malice, and to incite the hatred of the Federal government, and the Northern p-ople against the prople whom he urged into rebellion and war against the government. This ta's summary of this man! Is he not a rich specimen of Southern Loysley? Who can say that up; so false, so traitorous to every government, to every party, to his own people and neighbors, will not for a mess of pottage sell not only his own birthright, but the hopes of his country, its credit, its bonds, us wealth, its prosperity, its very existence to curpet baggers, or any body else!
