THE LATE TORRENT.

An Exciting Scene--Two Children Rescued.

The Philadelphia papers have had very full accounts of the late violent rains in that city and vicinity. The following thrilling incident is from the Philadelphia Press:

In the southwester part of the city there are located twelve houses with basement kitchens, into which the water flowed with impetuosity, and so fast that families in the upper part of the houses did not know their cellars were full until going down stairs. In one of the basement kitchens a couple of twin children, little boys, were asleep in a cradle. The mother, Mrs. Sarah Johnson, was up stairs attending to some household duties, not being aware of the inundation that had taken place. Her surprise may be imagined upon descending to find the water even with the top step of the stairway leading into the basement. Terror of the most thrilling kind seized upon her mind when she thought of her innocent babes. In vain did she attempt to go down stairs, but the water reached her neck as her feet touched the lower steps. It was a time of horror for her. She hastily ran to the street, screaming at the top of her lungs for help. "Help! help! help!" she cried, and her shrill voice was heard above the roarings of the pitiless storm. Two police officers went to her aid, by wading through the overflowed streets. "What is the matter, what is the matter?" they hurriedly asked. The poor woman presented the picture of despair. "Save my babies," was all that she ejaculated, as she swooned and fell. The officers rescued her, or she would have been drowned the next moment in two feet of water. "Where, madam, are your babies?" hurriedly inquired the officers, as the poor woman partly recovered from the mental shock that she had received. "There!" said she, as her eyes gazed wildly. "There!" pointing to the overflowing basement. "Good heavens!" exclaimed the officers, "they are drowned." As the word drowned fell upon the ear of the desiring mother, she again fainted and was carried into a neighboring house.

The officers entered the dwelling where the twin children were, and presently the little ones began to cry. It sounded like the voice of a spirit coming from the water. Other people arrived, for by this time the rain had ceased to fall. It was ascertained the twins were in a cradle, and that it must be floating with them. The force of the water had buoyed it up against the ceiling, but where could not be exactly told. The mother had by this time become more reconciled to the situation. Her neighbors cheered her; the men already at hand spoke words of encouragement. "The children will live, for we heard them cry, and they are floating in the cradle." The anxious mother told the men that she had left the cradle near the centre of the basement. Ears were strained to their utmost power to catch the sound of the voice of the seemingly doomed babes; but not a breath nor a sound could be heard save the dripping or the gurgling of the water. It was now a time of despair and terror to all. The men present, however, preserved their presence of mind, and did not relate their doubts and misgivings, although they believed then that the stillness of the babes—for the crying had ceased—was that of death. The carpet on the first floor was removed, and one of the police officers being a house carpenter, procured a hatchet, chisel, saw and auger, and in five minutes had a portion of the floor torn up. The precise position of the cradle was ascertained, and it was drawn beneath a hole that was cut through the floor and ceiling between the joists. This was a momentous period. The babes were still in the repose of slumber, and sucking each other's thumbs. A smile played upon their chubby faces, as though the little innocents were enjoying the dreams of angels. The mothers joy may be imagined at the restoration, but it cannot be described.

Alleged Starvation of English Emigrants—Sixty-Three Days' Passage from London to New York.

A summons was issued yesterday by the Castle Garden Commissioners for Captain Anderson, of American ship Villa Franca, to appear before the Commission on Monday evening, at ten o'clock, to answer charges brought against him by the passengers of the said ship. The vessel cleared from London on July 6, and during the voyage the passengers complained of being kept on half rations, together with other irregularities. The following is the

STATEMENT OF THE PASSENGERS:

They say during the entire voyage commencing the 6th of July, that only one-half of the rations which they are allowed by law were even served out to them. The meat served out during a great part of the voyage had to be thrown overboard, it being unfit for human food. Three quarts is the daily allowance of water to each passenger, but they complain of only receiving three pints throughout the voyage, which they say, was not enough to boil their rice in. They also complain that the Captain, on being remonstrated with, made use of threatening language towards them. They also stated that instead of being in the track to New York they were at one time within the influence of the Gulf Stream, and in a fair way of getting to Mexico, but how this is, will be better explained at the trial. As many of the passengers as can be present at the inquiry to substantiate the charges. —Sunday Herald.

MR. DANA ON MR. GREENLEY.—Mr. Dana, formerly associate editor of the New York Tribune, says:

There is perhaps no other man in all the Northern States who, within the last three years, has done so much as Mr. Greeley to weaken, divide and degrade his country; and it is fortunate he has not had the prestige of such an office to make his efforts more effective and pernicious.

THE CANDIDATES.—We have now five candidates for the Convention, in this county:—J. G. Nash, D. H. Starbuck, Charles Teague, F. B. Teague, Faure, and Dr. J. L. Johnson. —Salisbury Press.
