Speech of Major General Hancock at the Old Fellow's Banquet in Baltimore.

Mr. CHURCHMAN, GENTLEMEN OF BALTIMORE,

AND THE GUESTS WE HAVE MET HERE TO HONOR,

I would that some wretched tongue had been selected to respond to the toast just given. This being a national occasion it would have been appropriate to have selected the Lieutenant-General for this service. His remarks might have been more decorous, but he would have done justice to the theme. If Gen. Grant's modesty prevents him from indulging in oratory, he is none the less forcible. He is reticent in war, yet that is one of the qualities which aided in his great success; why, mag it not be so in time of peace? It may yet be (if it is not so now) that Grant, who is first in war though silent in peace, shall be first in the hearts of his countrymen. The army and the navy, with the people who furnished the sinews of war, have fought and won a gigantic fight, and with an enemy whose prowess made them worthy of our steel. It has been but a few months since the government had more than a million of men under arms, in the army alone. Now there are not one-fifth of that number in the service, and they will soon be discharged. It was feared by many judging from the experience of other nations after great wars, that the volunteers when discharged would not readily return to their civil pursuits, but would want new excitements—new wars. But such has not been the case. They have gone to their homes rejoicing, and those who remain in the service are burning to follow their example. Their conduct in this respect has been worthy their valor and intelligence. I am as ready as they are to see the sword turned into the ploughshare during our day and generation. It may be urged that we have grievances to redress. I believe these grievances can be settled by time alone. The power of the government, as shown in the late contest, is a star in our escutcheon, whose rays extend sufficiently far to give light even to London and to Paris. The Rio Grande is but a short distance in comparison, and I firmly believe from my own knowledge of the country and experience therein, that the Emperor of the French will be glad to visit Mexico, if he is allowed time to do so with honor. We paid some millions to get out of that country after capturing its capital, and it is thought that it will not cost France less than it did us, and every day's delay will add to the expense without a chance of compensation; for I consider it as certain as fate that the continued occupation of that country by a foreign force, which entered it in hostility to our interests and prejudices, will certainly lead to war. It is now, however, time for us to cultivate the arts of peace, and bind up the wounds made by the late rebellion. We may defer the day of retribution until we are strong again, without resting under the imputation of fear.—The Emperor of the French went to Mexico when it was convenient for him. We can defer meeting him there, until it is convenient for us. But it may not be necessary, and in such case we shall have done enough in our day for the honor of the country's arms. If the applause of the country is so freely accorded to the army and the navy for their prowess in war, that applause should be given now that there is peace, for the readiness shown by all of both services in laying down their power consented in war, now that the restoration of peace makes its exercises no longer necessary. Therein they have shown high and noble qualities, which have been commended in all ages, showing the existence of virtue in the people concerning them worthy the exercise of free government. For myself I shall hail the day with pleasure when, in the state of Maryland there will be no longer need for provost marshals to assist in the maintenance of order and authority. Knowing that the day will come, I shall endeavor to pass the way in my command in honoring the reins of military authority by allowing the civil authorities to exercise all power which they are willing or competent to administer, that the transition from the laws of war to those of peace shall be so gentle that no shock may be felt when our functions are ended, that the harshness of military rule may be forgotten. Since the policy of the government is to trust to the honor of the Southern people in the reorganization of their government rather than to guard their actions by military rule until a later day, it is the more necessary that charity should reign in every heart; and it affords me pleasure to be here at this least to-night, to assist in doing honor to an Order which has not forgotten that in war there should be fellowship in charity as in peace. The Odd Fellows of the United States, when all other bonds were cut asunder, yet had a thread of charity binding the states together. In this respect let the people of all sections follow their example. Let them in legislation legislate for the whole country. Let the North forget that the South has been burdened with slavery, and let the South recollect that Mason and Dixie's line is no longer a boundary of interest or prejudice. And let the churches, whose highest duty is to inculcate charity and good will among men, forget that there is a North or a South, but worship in fellowship as they worship one God.

Inquest.—An inquest was held this morning over the body of a man named Wm. W. Johnston, formerly of Johnston's county in this state, the verdict of which was that he died a natural death. The man it is said died in the winter, near Strother's mill, on Sunday evening last, and the attending physician states the cause of his death to have been from a congestive chill. He was engaged in bringing wood down the river for sale in the city. His body has not been interred. Jas. W. Hartman, one of the jurors, disagreed with the majority in matter of inquest, thinking it a clear case of starvation, and it should have been so stated in rendering the verdict. The facts of his being part owner of the flat engaged in the trade, and the testimony of the physician, conflict somewhat with the idea of his dying from want.—W. T. Herald.

An official statement of the public debt shows a decrease of twelve and a half millions, since the 1st of August.
