FROM WASHINGTON.

Compromise among the Radicals---Disqualification of Southern Voters until the Presidency is secured---Opposition of the President to the Scheme---Radical Bribery---News about the Presidential Election, &c.

[Correspondence Richmond Examiner.]

WASHINGTON, May 2.—The report from the Joint Committee on Reconstruction, explanatory and vindicatory of their proposed constitutional amendment, will be forthcoming in a few days. It will be chiefly devoted to the purpose of conciliating the support of the radical element, which may yet revolt at the decision against enforced negro suffrage. The plan of the committee was suggested by the Republican members of the New York delegation, and is a compromise among themselves. The Radicals insisted upon the third section, which disqualifies persons who were voluntarily engaged in the "rebellion" from voting for members of Congress or Presidential electors till July 4th, 1870. Senator Wilson, of Massachusetts; who offered a similar plan in the Senate on Friday last, did not include this disqualification, and it is believed that many Republican members disapprove of it, but may still vote for the scheme as a whole. In the discussions which occurred in the committee, it was assumed that the eleven Southern States would not be denied participation in the Federal Government; that it was dangerous to admit them to full participation at once; and that their representation should be curtailed so as to correspond with the number of voters. It was also assumed that it was said Republican to give the political power of a State to a minority of its inhabitants, as will be done by disqualifying more than half of the voters, and that, therefore, this disqualification must be temporary—that is, till after the next Presidential election.

The President is very much opposed to the whole scheme, and especially to the third section—disqualifying a large majority of Southern voters, to whom amnesty has been already extended.

Colonel Cooper, a member elect from Tennessee, and now acting as the President's confidential secretary, denounces the scheme in the most open and decided manner. Some of the five or six conservative Republican Senators are also known to be hostile to it. Of course all the Democratic members scout it, but they think it diabolically clever as a party trick. For, whether the project prevail or not, the Republicans keep their party together upon it, and make it a means for preventing the recognition of the lately Confederate States until they shall secure the next Presidential election.

Mr. Stevens and Mr. Fessenden expect to pass the resolution and bills accompanying it by the end of the next week, at least in one House if not in both; for so many speeches have been made on the general subject that members are out of wind as well as of ideas in regard to it. Besides, the party sinews will be applied to force a vote before any defection can occur in their ranks.

One of the bills accompanying the proposed amendment offers a bribe to land holders in the South for supporting the project—a temporary relief from taxation. The President is also flattered with the promise of an early admission of Tennessee representation; but he and some of the Tennessee members elect scorn this bribe.

It has been demonstrated in a late Republican speech in the House, that late Confederate and semi-Confederate States, added to some States about to be Democratic, will, or may carry the next Presidential election. In this view of the matter it is determined, it seems, that the Southern electoral vote shall not be counted at all, unless it be curtailed by the adoption of the proposed constitutional amendment.

KAPPA.

The Reconstruction Plans and the Next Presidential Election---Partisan Fear of the President's Policy---Choosing Southern Presidential Electors---A Crisis at the Counting---Assumptions of the Radicals, &c.

[Correspondence of the Baltimore Sun.]

WASHINGTON, May 1.—The bearing of the new republican project of reconstruction upon the next presidential election will be regarded with much interest by all parties. Should the President's plan of restoration prevail, the eleven Southern States would be represented by loyal men at once, and these States would be in full participation with other States of all rights as members of the Union. But these States, it is contended by the republicans, would, with the aid of one or two semi-rebel States, (as they choose to term them,) and of certain Northern States which are always ready to be demoralized, give a majority of electoral votes for a candidate who would be nominated in opposition to the candidate of the republican party.

Congress will, therefore, persist in measures to defeat this combination. The eleven Southern States are in the Union for some purposes and are acknowledged to be so by two out of three branches of the federal government. These States may, and probably will, choose presidential electors according to the provisions of the existing constitution. When the votes are counted, it will belong to the President pro tem. of the Senate to count such votes as he pleases, and declare the result. He would either act with his party or not. In either way, if the result would be affected by his decision, a political crisis would arise.

IOTA.

Proceedings of Congress.

WASHINGTON, May 2.

SENATE.—Mr. Williams offered an amendment to the bill reported by the Committee of Fifteen for the admission of the Southern States. It provides that they shall be admitted after the 4th of March, 1867, excepting Tennessee and Arkansas, which shall be admitted immediately on the ratification of the proposed amendment.

Mr. Dixon also offered an amendment which declares that when any of the lately rebellious States shall present themselves, not only in an attitude of loyalty, but represented by men capable of subscribing to constitutional tests, they shall be admitted to the rights of representation.

HOUSE.—The House voted on and defeated the Army Bill.

It next considered the bill passed by the Senate for re-organizing the army.
