Bishop Atkinson in England.

The last Church Intelligencer publishes the following interesting letter from Bishop Atkinson, of the Diocese of North Carolina, under date of London, July 5. It is the Bishop's intention to communicate frequently, through the same medium, to his friends at home, some account of the objects of interest he may meet while travelling in Europe:

We left Baltimore in the afternoon of June the 9th, embarking on the steamer Worcester, one of a line recently established from that port to Liverpool. Our voyage was rough for the season of the year, but could not be called stormy, (although we lost the top of one of our masts in a gale,) and as our ship was staunch and strong, and its officers skilful and courteous, the passage was perhaps more pleasant than usual. We reached Liverpool in about fifteen days, landing on Sunday evening the 24th. As Baltimore is, by water, some seven hundred miles farther than New York, from England, this may be considered rather a speedy voyage.

For the last two days we were constantly in sight of the Irish or Welsh coast which presented far more cheerful and varied scenes than those restless Atlantic waves, which had so long occupied our whole field of view.

Liverpool, although an ancient city, was a small and obscure one, until within the last hundred years, during which it has become the greatest emporium for foreign commerce in England, and therefore in the world. It has indeed one-third of the foreign trade, and one-sixth part of the general commerce of Great Britain. London, of course, exceeds it in the last particular, but even London does not equal it in the former. Its greatest boast perhaps is its docks. They occupy an area of about 200 acres, and the quays extend fourteen miles in length. These docks being crowded with ships, and at the same time separated from the river by a broad slip of landon which there are very often buildings, and at low tide being much above the level of the river, (for the tide rises here some thirty feet) they present the appearance of a leafless forest in the air.

Liverpool has used its great wealth very nobly in establishing institutions for the relief of every form of human suffering. This is indeed one of the characteristics of English Life which most strike an American; for in our new, and comparatively plentiful country, where want is less felt, and wealth less accumulated, charity, by no means exhibits itself on the same extensive and magnificent scale. And yet, with so dense a population, the evil is only mitigated, it cannot be healed. Begging is very common, and would be much more so, but for the police, and extreme poverty is seen side by side, with extreme wealth. I observed, for example, many women walking along those splendid streets without shoes, or stockings. On the whole, Liverpool, essentially a new city, does not interest an American very much because so much like his own.

On Thursday evening we went to Chester, the name of which (Castra) indicates its Roman origin, and here we were introduced to Antiquity. The walls built by that people, who always seem to have intended their buildings to last as long as the earth, still remain strong and compact, and unless the world itself should be destroyed, they will continue to stand when every structure in the United States shall be levelled with the dust. They form a delightful walk, commanding a view of the rich valley of the Dee, of neighboring heights covered by charming villas, of distant mountains, and a wide country covered over by a sheet of verdue, like velvet of the deepest green.

We, of course, visited the Cathedral where I first attended early service in the Lady Chapel as it is called, and then, after breakfast, a choral service in the Choir. I must remind your readers, that an English Cathedral is a building of which we have not only no representative, but no type in our own country. Their dimensions, e. g., are enormous. That at York is by internal measument, 534 feet long, 222 feet wide in the line of the transepts, and 99 feet high. In England are all built in the form of the ordinary Roman Cross, their length being from East to West, and their breadth from North to South. The most sacred part is toward the East, in which direction the early Christians expected Our Lord to come when He shall manifest Himself in His Glory. This orientation is one of the incidental evidences of an important fact in Church History, bearing, as it does, both upon doctrine and discipline, that Britain derived its Christianity not from Italy, but from the East, probably through France. For this orientation is required by the principles and practice of Church Architecture as understood in Greece and Asia, but is not in the same way considered a necessity, and is, I understand, far from being universal in Italy.

To return however to the English Cathedrals, the long part of the Cross is the nave of the Church, that where the intersection, is the Choir, and the intersecting parts are called the Transepts. That at Chester is by no means one of the largest in the country, yet it is spacious enough for one congregation to meet in a transept, another in the choir, while the nave is not used for public worship, as no preachers voice could fill it. There are many curious and ancient monuments in this Cathedral, and one which is new and very beautiful, lately erected, it is said, at the instance of some American clergymen, to the memory of Bishop Pearson, the illustrious author of the Exposition of the Creed who presided over this See in the latter part of the seventeenth century.

We wandered over the town, and saw something in the way in which our forefathers lived. In some of the old houses, the panes of glass in the windows were about four inches by six, the streets often very crooked, and sometimes so narrow that with outstretched arms one could almost touch the opposite sides. In some parts of the town they have houses of very singular construction. They have porticoes running along the front, much above the level of the street, affording a covered walk, with shops on one side, while below these are other shops and warehouses opening on the street. These arrangements were made, I presume, because in troublous times, before artillery was much used, no one was safe beyond the walls, while all were within, so that consequently every spot of ground protected by their enclosure was precious, and economized to the utmost.

In the afternoon we drove to Eaton Hall, a seat of the Marquis of Westminster, the richest nobleman in England, and which consequently has all the splendor that wealth can give, while nature and art have combined to adorn the scenery that surrounds it with the most attractive beauty. You enter the grounds soon after leaving Chester, and drive two or three miles before reaching the house, through a park in which noble oaks are scattered in clumps, or rows over the richest green sward, with here and there thickets to protect game, and now and then beds of flowers, while flocks of sheep and herds of deer are seen in graceful groups feeding at their ease, or stretched in the shade in peaceful repose. The house is a vast pile of building in the Gothic style, of which the tourist sees but the state-rooms. A suite of these consisting of a dining-room, a saloon, an ante-drawing room, and the drawing room, occupy one side of the house, and can be seen in one view. All of these are beautiful rooms, but the saloon is especially superb. It seems to be in the Moorish taste, and I thought, as the Alhambra was painted on the walls, that it was perhaps in imitation of an apartment in that far-famed building. Altogether it reminded one of a scene in the Arabian Nights. The library is a large room with richly bound books, but the collection seemed to me scarcely worthy of the magnificence of the house, and the wealth of the proprietor. There is a beautiful Chapel, with a very good copy of Rubens' Descent from the Cross, as an altar-peice, but the picture on the whole disappointed me. The statuary I liked better. We went over a part of the garden, and some of the conservatories. We were shown, as one of the most remarkable plants, the Venus's fly-trap, which so abounds around Wilmington. While looking at the productions of so many distant lands, congregated here by the power of wealth, I wished, as I had often wished before, that I had Dr. Curtis's or Dr. Cheshire's knowledge of Botany, to enable me better to appreciate what I saw.

The next day we came to London, travelling by the express train, at an average of about forty miles an hour, sometimes, I suppose, reaching fifty. We passed by towns and villages too rapidly even to be able to read the names of the stations, and we knew not where we were until we entered this wilderness of brick and mortar. I was fortunately enough to have here a young friend, Lewis, a son of Dr. A. S. DeRosset, of Wilmington, who is prospering as a merchant, and was able, and took pleasure in giving me all the aid I needed in procuring lodgings and the like.

On Sunday morning, I went to one of the most advanced Ritualistic Churches, that of St. Albans in Brook street, Holborn, and in the afternoon to St. James' Piccadilly, where I heard the Bishop of Oxford preach one of his eloquent sermons, but I must reserve my observations on these services to another letter.

I must add however what I know will give pleasure to some of our readers, that by the blessing of Providence, my anticipations of improved health have been, so far, encouragingly fulfilled, and that I trust, God willing, to return home, not as strong, to be sure, as I was twenty years ago, but more able to endure labor and fatigue, than I have been for the last two or three. I have had no recent attack of faintness, but I have not preached at all, and have studied very little, and in short, am doing what I can, to increase my strength.

Yours, truly, T. A.

PROSPECTUS.

This company owns by warranty title nearly fourteen thousand acres of mineral lands, situated in the counties of Chatham, Moore, Rockingham and Stokes, on the waters of Deep and Dan Rivers, in North Carolina, which abound in plentiful deposits of coal, copper, iron, salt, and, there is every reason to believe from general and surface indications, petroleum or coal oil.

The services of two practical and efficient men, experienced in boring for oil, and stimulated by a long course of success in Venango county, Pennsylvania, were secured by the company several months since and they are now on the lands, with the requisite force, tools, steam engine and machinery, boring a well with very flattering prospects of success. The organization of this company effected some time since has now been perfected in legal form, by act of incorporation, with a capital of $500,000, divided into 100,000 shares of $5 each.

By reference to the valuable and laborious reports of Prof. Emmons, State Geologist, and Commodore Wilkes, U. S. Navy, every one interested will be enabled to judge of the value of the large area of territory secured by the North Carolina Petroleum and Mining Co.

It is well known that a superior article of bituminous coal is now being mined in the Deep river coal region, where a portion of the lands are situated, and this company owns property known to be equal if not superior to any on which shafts have been sunk. Copper, iron and salt also abound, and the attention of capitalists has already been directed to this section on account of its value for the above minerals.

Below are given a few extracts from the journals showing that there is no good reason why there should not be as large quantities of oil in the "Old North State" as in other States.

Oil has been struck in Overton county, Tennessee, on the north line of that State, about midway from its eastern border, eighteen miles from the Cumberland mountains.—Christian (Richmond) Observer.

OIL WELLS IN WEST VIRGINIA.—The Parkersburg Times gives an astonishing statement of the yield of wells in the region thereabout, consisting of Wood, Wirt, Ritchie and other counties, viz: Burning Springs, 2,500 barrels per day; White Oak, 1,500; Lick Run, 300; Horse Neck, 150; and of the several wells on Hughes river, 6,000 barrels per day. The quality is said to be remarkably fine. The Times considers the oil of West Virginia the best yet discovered.

THE OIL EXCITEMENT IN ILLINOIS.—The oil excitement in Clark county is still high. Some eight or ten derricks are up and at work. The deepest well is only 325 feet, with a fair yield of oil. Some of the other wells have struck oil and gas at from 20 to 100 feet.—Much time and money will be spent this summer in the thorough development of the oil resources of Clark county. Men of capital and experience seem confident that oil will be found in large quantities, and are willing to test their faith by a free expenditure in developing the lands. The first company who bored on the land of Hon. T. B. Young, are now engaged in trying to raise the auger which was lost last fall. The Eastern Illinois Company will begin work in a few days twelve miles southwest of the first well. The prospect in that locality is good.—Chicago Tribune.

It is known that after a few months boring in the vicinity of Lynchburg, a large vein of oil was struck and a productive well is now in successful operation. This is on the same line with, and about 80 miles from, the company's first well on Dan River, where the indications both general and particular are similar.

In order to have sufficient means to develop this valuable property in such a manner as to insure success, the Directors have authorized 10,000 shares of the capital stock to be sold to raise a working capital, and subscriptions for that number or any part thereof will be received.

An uncommonly favorable opportunity for investment is thus afforded, as those who choose to buy stock under this offer will have the advantage of an equal footing with the original corporators in an enterprise which, after the example of the immense profits realized in those of a similar character in other States, though in many respects on less favorable conditions than this, (compare the extent, cheapness and fee simple title of the basis of operations here offered) gives reasonable assurance of the most lucrative results. In many instances in sections of less favorable oil localities, shares have advanced in a few days from $2 or $5 to $20 and even $50, and poor men who made small investments realized fortunes.

Further information may be had at the office of the company, one door north of the Court House, Greensboro, N. C, where books of subscription are now open.

By order of the Directors.
