For the Sentinel.

From the Country.—Editors of the Sentinel: Gentlemen—People who read the papers regularly, do feel sometimes as if a talk with some editor was a matter of necessity, by way of exchange of ideas sometimes, and sometimes by way of acknowledgment for pleasure and benefit derived. Just now I feel myself considerably your debtor; first, for your editorial of the 23d inst., in regard to our University, in particular, and other schools of learning in general, and the way in which we are spoiling our children at home; and second, for the very sensible communication of "Sene," which I read aloud to a select circle with immense applause.

I don't know when I have been more pleased, gentlemen, than by your plain talk about education. I, for one, feel condemned, and resolved at once to turn over a new leaf in my domestic administration, refused, that very evening, with exemplary firmness, to allow my youngest boy more than three lumps of sugar in his tea. I venture to say, there is not a teacher in the country who does not secretly thank you for that pointed talk to parents. I wish you would give the public just such a vigorous lecture, free gratis, every week. There are topics in abundance. "Sene" writes well, and says the truth itself. If more old men (and women) could make their voices heard these days, and the young men (and women) were a little, just a little less conspicuous and more modest, what a blessing it would be to our late beloved country—so-called.

Excuse an old woman's garrulity, but I see your merchants are selling off at cost, or thereabouts. Allow me to suggest to them the policy of annexing the prices of some of their goods in their advertisements. We country people would like to know just how far a little money will go. Say, I have twenty dollars to invest in calico, muslin, or shirting. I have two or three neighbors also amissibly disposed to the same amount. We read the Sentinel of course. Everybody does. We read Mr. Tucker's announcement with deep emotion. We read Mr. Cooke's card, and, per contra, Mr. Creech's—Our imaginations became excited with the hope of enriching ourselves, one way or another, among them. When th^t-t^s-a fall out, you know, we honest people, &c., &c., &c. Well now, to be serious, we might often send small little commissions to your city, if we had some guide as to prices. What is good calico, for instance? Unless there is a decided reduction, I hold that it would not be fair to our home merchants to send what little money we have abroad. But the melancholy fact is that it is so little, makes us nervous about prices. Isn't it astonishing how the ladies will buy? They will, they will—Heaven bless them. There is always something needed in a family you know. Our experience in the war has made us feverish on the subject of laying in supplies. I have positively done several merchants in my neighborhood good service, by hinting obscurely to certain impressionable ladies, that it would be as well to have a stock of shirting and sheeting on hand, so that "I should not be surprised if another war" &c., with other deep reflections of the like nature. This very week I sent three ladies out buying up all the sewing cotton to be had, by telling them I had no doubt the price would soon rise, the "Sea Island" crop being short. It is a fact, I have not been able to get a "No. 60 Cotton" since. What does Mr. Rosenbaum ask for cotton?

You perceive, I am not concerned as to the price of dress goods, a suit of sackcloth turned up with sashes, is most appropriate for the times.
