A VISIT TO BETHANY AND THE GARDEN OF GETHSEMANE.

CONSTANTINOPLE, March 26, 1867.

My last, I think, was written in Jerusalem, and descriptive of a ride through the valleys of Hinnom and Jehoshphat, and to the summit of Mount Olivet. Since we left the "City of the Great King," our method of traveling has mainly been such as to render correspondence impossible. After spending from eight to twelve hours of an day on horseback one is not apt to scratch with "cacoethes scribendi" at night. And even if he were afflicted with that malady, the inconveniences of a tent, especially in hot weather, when rain and the feet together have made a jelly of the ground, the interruptions from companions, the altercations among the mules, always latched with their noses within a few feet of the tabernacle, the ear-racking gutturals of the quarrelsome muleteers, the soporiferous serenade of all the dogs, who bark as if the souls of Tartarus had entered into them, and were determined to escape in sound, and, lastly, the constant demand made upon your fingers by a different kind of "cacoethes," produced by flea bites, these, and a host of the other remedies, would speedily work a cure, or change the nature of the disease.

The consequence is, a letter written about Jerusalem must bear the caption of Constantinople and be without the freshness secured by describing a scene while the heart and pen are still warm with the enthusiasm it has kindled.

Every day of

OUR SOJOURN IN THE HOLY CITY

was a chapter for a volume. We visited the Church of St. Ann, the pools of Bethesda and Hezekiah, the Chapel of the Flagellation, the site of Pilate's Palace, the arch of Ecce Homo, the Cathedral of the Holy Sepulchre with its numerous shrines, genuine or apocryphal, the tower of David, the Leper's Quarter, the Coenaculum or room of the Last Supper, the House of Caiaphas, the Mosks of Omn and Asak; the immense excavations underneath the City supposed to be the quarries whence were taken the stones of the ancient walls and in which were hewn ready for the building those of Solomon's Temple, the grotto of Jeremiah and the tombs of the Kings, the Judges and the Prophets; but I despair of being able to give you an account of our visits. Those nine days condensed the life of years. The number and beauty of the pictures they donated to its galleries have made a Louvre of memory, through which the mind delights to leisurely stroll, and pausing before whatever scenes best suit its passing moods to gaze, study, admire and feel rich in their imperishable possession.

There are two spots, however, in the vicinity of Jerusalem, of which I must say something, more to gratify my own love to talk about them than to instruct or entertain you. If not mentioned in the list it is because they occupy a separate chamber of the heart, hanging just over the altar of its almost sanctuary. Before them affection, like a priest, keeps its golden lamps continually burning.

BETHANY AND GETHSEMANE.

Connected in situation, in history, in theology. They are on opposite sides of Olivet. It was in Bethany that Jesus shed tears of pity, and in Gethsemane that he sweat blood drops of agony. It was in Bethany that Jesus was anointed for his burial, and in Gethsemane that he was seized for his execution. It was in Bethany that Jesus gave the sweetest token of His friendship for man by sharing man's home, its joys and sorrows, and in Gethsemane that He gave the strongest evidence of his infinite love for man by drinking to the dregs the wormwood and gall of man's iniquity and its penalty. I remember well the day, as who would not, we visited those foot-prints of Divinity.—Clattering out of St. Stephen's gate we passed through the Turk's cemetery, where, railed and draped in white, the women, whose business it is to go morning and evening to the tombs and mourn, were leaning against the sculptured turbans, engaged in the formalities of grief. We then descended a steep hill by the spot pointed out as that where the proto-martyr "fell asleep" under the stones of the mob and with the heavens opened to receive him. Crossing the bridge over the Kedron and leaving the tomb of the virgin on our left, we turned the corner of the wall of Gethsemane and halted before the gate on its upper or eastern side, until "Antika," our guide, could notify the padre of our presence. Antika dismounted and rapped energetically, but the padre did not respond; so we concluded that he either was "dead to the world" in slumber or absent on an errand of charity, and concluded also not to tarry longer, but continue our ride to Bethany and rap again on our return. Our route was that taken by David in his flight from Absalom. As we toiled up the rough and cantery-worn, road every particular of that and event so minutely and vividly narrated in II Samuel, xv and xvi, came to mind. The indulgent father and exiled king, fleeing from his son and throne, "went over the brook Kedron, toward the way of the wilderness. And went up by the ascent of Olivet and wept as he went up, and had his head covered; and he went barefooted; and all the people that were with him covered every man his head, and they went up weeping as they went up." On the summit we rested as did that procession while "David worshipped God, and Hushai the Archite came to meet him with his coat rent and earth upon his head." Inclining to the left we crossed the northern shoulder of the mount and arrived at the place, easily fixed a little below a point (about one) to Shiloh's town, at which David got not where a stride past the top of the hill by Ziba, the servant of Mephibosheth, who brought with him "a couple of asses saddled and upon them two hundred loaves of bread, and a hundred bunches of raisins, and a hundred of summer fruits, and a bottle of wine." Still further down the declivity there was another interruption of the flight. Shimei, the son of Gera, came forth, cursing as he came, and cast stones at David, his servants, his household, his people, and the mighty men on his right hand and his left. I could but think while riding along that even had the monarch been able to have held his kingdom and quelled the insurrection, the pain caused by the ingratitude and rebellion of his idolized son was enough for the stoutest spirit to support, but when to that pain was added the treachery of officers and subjects, the necessity of sudden departure, the sweeping away as by a whirlwind of his property, the danger of starvation, of capture, of death at the hands of his own offspring, I wondered that he did not sink some where upon this road and die with broken heart.

How I rejoice that it was otherwise.—Death would have snapped the lyre-strings which the measure of the calamity served only to strike as with a bold hand into psalms that have never been silenced since—that, floating through ages of sorrow, have been unceasingly swelled by the praises they evoked from the sighing ones they comforted into singing; and their end is not yet nor can be until God shall have wiped away all tears from his children's eyes.

But we are in sight of Bethany. There it sits in its sequestered nook, a hamlet of about twenty half-ruined houses. It has a beggar's look. It was never the home of the rich, the proud, the grand. But He who, though rich, for our sake, became poor, abided with its humble habitants.—And now what name that conquered a world and that made senates tremble and nations applaud, is so familiar to Christendom's ear and tongue and heart as the names of "Martha and her sister and Lazarus," the family whom Jesus loved.

When Paris and London shall be as Nineveh and Babylon to-day are; nay, when the names of them all shall have entirely faded from memory, this insignificant village shall still be young in its immortality of renown. For Bethany is celebrated in the annals of heaven, and on the resurrection day whose morning star was lighted here in the restoration of Lazarus to his anguished sisters, Bethany shall be distinctly heard and form a thrilling note in the hosannah chorus of the redeemed.

THE TOMB OF LAZARUS.

But I digress. The path is precipitous. We dismount and lead our horses down.—We have reached the tomb of Lazarus. We enter by a low opening, and feel our way down a long, winding, dilapidated staircase to a small chamber, the walls of which are partly plastered, partly the naked rock of the cavern. From this chamber, a few steps lead into a low vault, I imagine not more than nine feet square. Therein lay the body of Lazarus. The closeness of the atmosphere limits our inspection to a mere glance. We retire to the larger room, and sitting upon the floor, Bible in hand, one of us read aloud, by candle light, St. John's account of the miracle and of the Saviour's intercourse with those whom it most affected. How touchingly simple, how surpassingly beautiful that Gospel sounds when read on the spot it commemorates. The past tense becomes the present. The scene is not finished but transpiring. Right there in that cell the corpse had been lying four days, and every day Mary has been here to weep.—The noise of conversation, as of many persons above, I begin to hear.

A shadow is in the door. It is He. The long-expected and prayed for has come from beyond Jordan. His mellow voice tremulous with emotion, but loud with authority, peals down the arched staircase and echoes among these sepulchral walls. "Lazarus come forth." It goes deep beyond, reaching into the regions of death. Hush! do you hear that rustling? See! he comes stooping, "bound hand and foot with grave clothes and his face bound about with a napkin." Slowly he mounts the steps. He is on the threshold. He has passed out under the sky. Listen again! "Loose him and let him go!" And Lazarus, the dead brother, no longer dead, is in the arms of his bereaved sisters, no longer bereaved.—Neighbors gather around and passionately greet him. Bethany is glad. The news flies throughout the land. Crowds come from Jerusalem to see "the man" who has wrought the wonder, and believe him God.

Reluctantly do we tear ourselves from the hallowed place. We go from the grave to the house of Mary and Martha, and that of Simon the leper, where, while Jesus sat at supper, Mary anointed his feet with costly spikenard, and wiped them with her hair, and, as the room then was, even so, to day, the world is "filled with the odor of the ointment."

THE GARDEN OF GETHSEMANE.

We return to Gethsemane, over the Southern shoulder of Olivet, by the road Messiah followed on the morning of his triumphal entry into Jerusalem. Our rags are more successful this time than before, for the heavy iron gate soon swings open with a creak, exhibiting the treasured host of Padre Louis, who invites us into the garden. It disappoints at first. There is too much of art, too little of nature. The happy medium, so desirable and so rarely obtained, between culpable neglect and excessive care, is not found here. The fancy which has already prepared a Gethsemane of its own does not at once recognize the claims of this; objects to the imprisoning walls, to the trim parterres, to the front-yard neatness of the railings, to the prayer stations arithmetically calculated, and marked by crucifixes on the stuccoed enclosure, to the air of perfect readiness for the scrutiny of connoisseurship in the whole.

But the eye speedily becomes accustomed to what it cannot alter and concentrates its attention upon the olive trees doubly grand—grand from their own palpable antiquity, grand from association with incidents of which they are the sole surviving spectators on earth. These trees are eight in number. Their gnarled and knotty trunks, and its spreading leafy boughs, give them the appearance of patriarchs in the attitude of blessing. I cannot understand why they should not be sawed as the event requires, nor do I desire to understand, if an illusion lovelier than the truth is to be dissolved by the explanation. I abandon criticism to erudite cavilers and recline under the foliage of the largest and most ancient of the trees—the one supposed to have shadowed the victim in his prostrations of agony. Here, then, with soul exceeding sorrowful unto death, He fell on the ground and prayed, while His disciples slept a stone's cast hence, too fatigued to watch with Him. Here threw He Himself and groaned the entreaty to be delivered from the agonizing cup. Oh, the intensity of that struggle, it wrung the crimson perspiration from his temples and forced the strengthening succor of anxious Heaven; but its issue was victory, and its fruit eternal life.

I will not, dear Courier, trespass upon your patience by detailing my reflections while resting under that venerable olive, by telling how with mental vision I saw Judas, one of the twelve, come, accompanied by a great multitude with swords and staves from the chief priests and elders of the people, and how, after the kiss of murder was planted on His pale cheek; I saw the Son of Man rudely grasped and led away to Calaphas, to Calvary. For once upon the tide I should be borne by it beyond my intentions—beyond your wishes. When we were about to withdraw, Padre Louis presented each of us a delicate bouquet, composed of roses, jonquils, marigolds and other flowers which he had culled and arranged during our short stay. I took mine to my room in the hotel, and by putting them in water enjoyed their beauty and aroma for several days. They died too soon, as all lovely things do, but their meaning still blooms in my being, and

"Their fragrance hath made
A garden within me where memory strays
Evermore, with faint footfalls, down blossoming ways."

THE WORLD ASTONISHED

AT THE WONDERFUL REVELATIONS

MADE BY THE GREAT ASTROLOGIST,

Madame H. A. PERRIGO.

She reveals secrets no mortal ever knew. She restores to happiness those who, from doleful events, catastrophes, crosses in love, loss of relations and friends, loss of money, &c., have become despondent. She brings together those long separated, gives information concerning absent friends or lovers, restores lost or stolen property, tells you the business you are best qualified to pursue and in what you will be most successful causes speedy marriages and tells you the very day you will marry, gives you the name, likeness and characteristics of the person. She reads your very thoughts, and by her almost supernatural powers unveils the dark and hidden mysteries of the future. From the stars we see to the firmament—the maleific stars that overcome or predominate in the configuration from the aspects and positions of the planets and the fixed stars in the heavens at the time of birth, she deduces the future destiny of man. Fail not to consult the greatest Astrologist on earth. It costs you but a trifle, and you may never again have so favorable an opportunity. Consultation fee, with likeness and all desired information, $1. Parties living at a distance can consult the Madame by mail with equal safety and satisfaction to themselves, as if in person. A full and explicit part, written out, with all inquiries answered and likeness enclosed, sent by mail on receipt of price above mentioned. The strictest secrecy will be maintained, and all correspondence returned or destroyed. References of the highest order furnished those desiring them. Write plainly the day of the month and year in which you were born, enclosing a small lock of hair.

MEDICINES, &C.

SAUNDERS'

CATHARTIC AND ALTERATIVE PILLS,

RECOMMENDED BY THE BEST PHYSICIANS. Purely Vegetable, No Calomel in them. Never Gripe; being Coated with Gum Tolu are perfectly tasteless.

For regulating the Bowels, and for the cure of Bilious Fever, Bilious Headache, Constipation or Costiveness, Jaundice, Indigestion, Piles, Dyspepsia, Liver Diseases, Dizziness, loss of Appetite, Sick Headache, and all diseases where a reliable Cathartic medicine is required.

Dr. W. F. Malloy, who has no superior as a Physician in North Carolina, has examined the formula by which these pills are made and highly recommends them.

Col. W. J. Martin, the distinguished Farmer and Professor of Chemistry in the University of North Carolina, has analyzed them, and certifies that they contain no Mercury or any other mineral constituent whatever.

THE

AMERICAN BITTERS.

The Great Southern Tonic,

AND THE MOST PALATABLE STOMACHIC EVER USED.

FOR THE CURE OF DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION and Digestion, Flatulency, Sluggish Circulation of the Blood, Bilious Complaints arising from a morbid condition of the Stomach and Bowels. An Elegant Tonic in debilitated states of the Digestive Organs, or of the system generally. For the loss of appetite it is the most wholesome and effectual Tonic in the world. It strengthens nature and enables the system to triumph over diseases. In valetudinarians attended with tremors and general nervous debility, it is eminently adapted, acting directly upon the nervous system, and thus removing the cause of the disease. In Intermittent and Remittent Fevers, it is unrivalled, and in fact, whenever a prompt and agreeable Tonic is required, this should be used.

Dr. Johnston R. Jones, one of the most eminent and well known Physicians of the South, testifies to the great benefit he has derived, and others who have been greatly benefited by the use of these Bitters.
