THE MOBILE RIOT.

A most regrettable state of feeling is springing up in the Southern cities, which threatens to complicate matters already sufficiently difficult, and to still further delay and embarrass the restoration of the Union. The riot at Mobile on Monday evening, following close upon the negro riots at Richmond and New Orleans, challenges inquiry into the cause of these most untoward disturbances. They tend not only to revive the decaying animosity between the North and the South, but to set race against race throughout the Southern States.

The interruption of Judge Kelley's speech at Mobile, and the breaking up of the meeting assembled to hear it, might, if considered alone, be susceptible of a coloring which would represent the South as inimical to free speech. But no such construction is warranted by a full view of the facts. Mr. Kelley has been for some time making a progress through the South, speaking at various places with all the freedom of a Radical zealot; but nowhere else have there been the slightest symptoms of disturbance.—Senator Wilson, another free-spoken Republican who has said many distasteful things, is on his second stumping tour in the South, and in all the numerous meetings he has addressed he has met with treatment as attentive and respectful as he received last autumn during the political canvass in Maine. Horace Greely and Gerritt Smith, two life-long and most noted abolitionists, made speeches in Richmond on Tuesday evening, and were listened to with cordial good feeling by whites as well as blacks.—It is manifest, therefore, that Judge Kelley's reception at Mobile was exceptional; an exception to the treatment bestowed on other speakers of the same party, and an exception to that received by Judge Kelley himself until he reached the extremest Southern city on the Gulf.

As the treatment received by Judge KELLEY at Mobile was peculiar and exceptional, it is natural to inquire whether his bearing and language were not exceptional also. It is not customary with the American people, in any part of the country, to listen to political speeches with the same quiet decorum which they observe in their churches in respect to sermons. They applaud, they hiss, they ask questions, they utter ejaculations of scorn, contempt, dissent, irony, approbation, mirth, or appreciation, just as the humor takes them; and with skilful speakers who can command their temper, much of the life and interest of such meetings is made to consist in the adroit turn given to such interruptions. Not even the President of the United States was protected by the dignity of his office from interruptions of the same kind in his noted tour last year in the free North, which his enemies called in derision "swinging round the circle." Nobody can have forgotten the offensive rudeness which he encountered at Cleaveland and other places, and although, on one occasion, he seemed, for a moment, to lose his temper, he was hurried no farther by his feelings than to bandy words with the disturbers; a condescension which some thought undignified, but which was certainly in far better taste than the insolent threats indulged in by Judge KELLEY at Mobile.—Although the provocation was much greater nobody would have thought the President justified in threatening his auditors with military vengeance if they refused to hear him. He was sometimes, like Judge Kelley, unable to proceed with his intended remarks; but nobody affected to consider it as an evidence that free speech is not tolerated in the North. The Radicals did not like his remarks, and they drowned his voice in confusion; but if he had been foolish and insolent enough to threaten to bring the whole Army of the United States to compel them to listen, he would doubtless have stirred up as much of a riot as Judge Kelley did at Mobile. Up to the moment of Mr. Kelley's passionate threat, nothing occurred but what is usual in political meetings everywhere when there is a strong intermixture of dissenting auditors. Even in England, celebrated as the country of free speech, Henry Ward Beecher encountered a storm of hostile tumult at the beginning of his speeches; but his practiced dexterity enabled him to humor his audiences and get the control of them, as he would easily have done at Mobile had he stood in Judge Kelley's place. We therefore conclude that Judge Kelley is more chargeable with blame than anybody else for the Mobile riot.

We are in favor of the widest latitude of free speech in the South, in the North, and everywhere. But let the utterance of opinion be alike free to all! It is not freedom but intolerance for the military authority to be used, as it is by the reconstruction satraps, to warn and suppress dissenting newspapers, while bitter Radicals like Judge Kelley boast that the Army will back them in every insolent and insulting strain of remark their unvenomed breath can utter. Nor is it consistent with freedom to suppress such manifestations of the feeling and temper of political audiences as prevail in all countries where political discussion is tolerated, and is constantly exhibited even in the British Parliament.

We have no doubt that the speeches of Wilson and Kelley, and the attempts that are making to array the black population of the South in political hostility to the whites, are unfortunate and mischievous, although the sacred right of free speech requires that they should be tolerated. The incipient negro riots in Richmond at the close of the last week are their natural fruit. Let it be borne in mind that it is to prevent greater outbreaks of negro violence that troops are encamped permanently within the city; that it was the negroes that Judge Underwood found it necessary to warn, on Sunday, that if they carried out their projected riot the next day, cannon would be planted to sweep the streets; that it was the negro Mounted Guards that General Schofield disbanded on Monday, as dangerous to the public peace. The fact that the negroes came armed to the Mobile meeting, is of a similar color. Such demonstrations betoken consequences of the Radical agitation which every patriot, which every friend of the South, and every well-wisher of the negro race, should most sincerely deprecate and deplore.

She reads your very thoughts, and by her almost supernatural powers unveils the dark and hidden mysteries of the future.
