The Daily Sentinel.

VOL. II. RALEIGH, N. C., WEDNESDAY, JUNE 26, 1867. NO. 272.

THE SENTINEL.

WM. E. PELL, PROPRIETOR.

From the New York Post, (Rad.)

PLAYING WITH FIRE.

The last Congress passed a reconstruction act. It did this because its members felt very sensibly that their constituents demanded at their hands a specific method of reconstruction, a precise declaration of terms, by agreeing to which the people of the Southern States could be restored to self-government as to their local affairs, and be admitted to representation in Congress.

Under the terms of that act registration of voters is now going on peaceably in all the Southern States, and in a few weeks elections will be held for members of constitutional conventions. The Tribune this morning admits—

"The Southern people accepted the military bill manfully, and have endeavored to act under its provisions. Instead of apathy, and wrath, and discontent, we have found them eager and pains-taking in their efforts to reorganize their political system under the military bill. If the work is arrested, they are not to blame; and we have no right to increase the conditions imposed last March. If anything, we should recognize the temper of the South by limiting them."

The question of "limiting them"—tinkering them, that is to say—had better be suffered to rest. Congress sets its conditions; the people of the Southern States, so the Tribune tells us, have "accepted them manfully;" it would seem best, then, to let well enough alone and restrain for awhile the sacred and indomitable rage of the political tinkers. Such a suggestion as this of the Tribune's can only do mischief by raising false expectations in the Southern States, and furnishing an argument to the evil-disposed against reconstruction under the present act, and thus causing still further delays.

But the Generals whom the President appointed to command the military districts in the Southern States asked the President for instructions in regard to some of their duties under the act. When we remember that under the Constitution the President is Commander-in-Chief of the army and navy of the United States, this demand of his subordinates appears very proper.

The President, who deplorably lacks tact, instead of telling them what to do, and what not to do, referred the question to his Attorney General, who took a number of weeks to study the act, and finally, after the lapse of a long time, sent back a very long and foggy opinion, whose chief result, so far, seems to be to set the country by the ears anew, and to afflict those who study it in the hope of enlightenment from it with a hopeless stupor.

But events will not wait, even for Mr. Stanbery; and when a General in command does not receive the instructions he asks for, being a man of action, trained under Grant and Sherman, he takes the responsibility and acts upon his own opinions. Thus, while Mr. Stanbery was cogitating, General Swayne, in Mobile, removed the Mayor and Chief of Police, because the military officer in command there had neglected the chief duty he was employed to perform—to keep the peace, namely. Colonel Shepard ought to have been removed, clearly, if any one, for his negligence was to blame, if any one was to blame, for what General Swayne's official report shows to have been an entirely unpremeditated occurrence, the result solely of the fears, rather than the malice, of the persons present at the meeting.

A week or ten days later General Sheridan removed Governor Wells; why, for what reason, for what crime or offence, the public does not know, for he has never been brought to trial. Wells is a standing disgrace to the Union men of Louisiana who elected him; he is not fit to govern the State; and we can imagine he is just the sort of creature to keep an honest, straightforward, patriotic soldier like Sheridan in a perpetual rage. Receiving no instructions—he had, like a faithful soldier, asked for them—Sheridan finally kicked Wells out and appointed another person to fill his place.

Now, it is a matter of fact that the reconstruction act does not give the generals in command this power of removal and appointment. We listened to the discussions in Congress, and privately among members of Congress, of the act, before it was passed and afterwards, and do not think that any one of those who voted for it understood it to confer such powers upon the generals. Certainly, the very persons who framed and passed the act denied to the President—the Commander-in-Chief of the army—the power or right to depose this same Wells last summer; and it would be preposterous to suppose that they meant to confer upon a subordinate greater authority than they were willing to allow his chief.

Congress gave the commanding generals large powers; they are authorized to arrest and try any one by military commission. Swayne might have so tried the Mayor and Chief of Police of Mobile; Sheridan might have so tried Wells; but as for removing them without trial, for that they have no authority. Again, as to appointments, the act distinctly provides for the filling of vacancies in the civil governments by election, specifying who should be voters:

"And in all elections to any office under such provisional government all persons shall be entitled to vote, and none others, who are entitled to vote under the provisions of the fifth section of this act and no person shall be eligible to any office under such provisional government who would be disqualified from holding office under the provisions of the third article of said constitutional amendment."

These Generals too, with the best intentions, have made a mistake. The President would blunder very gravely, indeed, should he for this mistake remove Sheridan, in whose patriotism and good sense the country has so great confidence that even the unmeasured abuse and vile insinuations heaped upon him by the Radical New Orleans Republican have not for a moment shaken its faith in him. But he ought to tell him very kindly that he has made a mistake; that if Wells has done wrong he must bring him to trial; and the country will not, we believe, regret any punishment which may befall the double faced, cowardly creature. And Mr. Johnson should instruct all the commanding Generals that they are not to set outside of the plain instructions of the reconstruction act. For instance, General Sickles has commanded, in South Carolina, the stoppage of the distillation of spirits from grain. But that is no part of his duty.

But, says some one, the generals ought to have this authority. That is a matter of opinion; the fact is that Congress did not give it to them; and a law ought to be obeyed until it is changed. Congress, it is said, will meet in July; it may change the law—though we should think any change now unwise for it will give occasion for much mischievous misunderstanding.

In the meantime we are sorry to observe a disposition in some quarters to badger the President again. What is the use!—Mr. Johnson has not done anything yet; there is no reason to believe that he means to remove Sheridan or any other of the Southern commanders; suppose he tells them that they have made a mistake, and instructs them in future not to make removals, except by bringing offenders to trial as the law prescribes; what then? Will that comfort Wells, or the "rebel element," as it is called? Will it not rather increase the embarrassment of the evil-disposed? Will they not see that universal suffrage, the thing they aim to keep off and prevent, is brought upon them, of necessity and by the act, as soon as anywhere an elected officer of the civil government misconducts himself and subjects himself to trial and punishment at the instance of the commanding general? Sheridan's haste has in effect put off the exercise of universal suffrage in Louisiana.

The act appears to work well. If it is fairly executed it will yield all the results required and expected by Congress; but if it did not, it is the law, and ought to be obeyed until Congress sees fit to change it.
