EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA.

Of all the green shores washed by the Atlantic tide from Maine to Texas—a stretch of over three thousand miles—we challenge any section of like dimensions to vie with Eastern North Carolina in richness of soil, variety of production or equality of climate.

Sloping east from the line of the Wilmington and Weldon Railroad, or even reaching back to take in the hill country from which Raleigh looks down on the sea, we have an area of twenty-four thousand square miles, and over three hundred miles of coast, which will compare favorably with the finest country on the globe.

No land ever held out its luxuriant fertility with so lavish a wooling as does "our nature" to the culture of the husbandman. Cotton, corn, tobacco, rice, grain, fruit, lumber and fish—the bazaar of Florida and the wealth of Maine—are joined in the agricultural resources of the old North State. Pecans and nut bed—clove bed and peach—cotton bed and turpentine orchard—there is scarcely a foot of this broad domain—whether it be six feet deep in loam, or clumped with wire grass—that will not reward the toiler's labor with a handsome return. If he would cultivate the great staples of cotton and corn, there are thousands of acres that will produce each a load of forty bushels. If he would devote his attention to the cereals, there are highlands and lowlands that cannot be surpassed. Would he raise vegetables we offer him a garden spot. And France itself may find a successful rival in the production of the vintage, if one person would only turn their attention in that direction.

That supercilious demagogue, who sought to stir up the political pot in the "seceded States" that he might gain the eminence generally acquired by the assun.—Kelly—has told us of riches which may be scooped up in North Carolina by the basi full. His exaggeration would not have been wide of the mark had he added that it needed a pair of strong arms, a pair of mules, and a gun or plough to dig them up.

It seems to us, a slight at the map ought to entice thousands of emigrants to our stores. Sterile New England divides and quadruples her population, almost yearly; while North Carolina, with a soil whose native luxurys support thousands and thousands of helpless "refugees of the war," is sparingly settled with here and there farmers. It must be remedied!—The agricultural organization of our State needs reconstruction.

The necessities of the country require that all the products of labor should this year be swollen to the utmost extent of our producing capacity. The more we produce the richer we will be as a nation, and as a consequence the world will rest the financial burden which now weighs heavily upon the shoulders of our people.

Unfortunately, there are several circumstances which indicate an unusual demand in the production of the mouth for the present year. Cris for bread have already come up to us from many quarters of the land. The general figure of starvation which in Peale's "Court of Death," follows war, is too aptly verified by the famine which now reigns in many portions of the "southern states."

Raleys will soon be regarded as an article of the past generation, so far as the use of it is putting up cotton is concerned.

The newly invented iron ties are so simple, cheap and excellent, that they will soon be in universal use. The protection they offer in case of fire is so manifest that insurance companies will make a large deduction in rates charged on cotton, either in store or in transit, favorable to the iron tie.
