VOL. II. RALEIGH, N. C., FRIDAY, JULY 5, 1867. NO. 280.

THE SENTINEL.

WM. E. PELL, PROPRIETOR.

THE LATE EMPEROR MAXIMILIAN FERDINAND OF MEXICO.

The Emperor Maximilian was the son of Archduke Francis Charles of Austria and Princess Sophia of Bavaria. He was born on the 6th. of July, 1832. In 1846 he entered the Austrian navy. On the 27th of July, 1859, he married the unfortunate Maria Carlotta, a daughter of the late King Leopold I, of the Belgians. He was appointed Admiral and Commander-in-chief of the Austrian navy in 1859, and retained this position until his acceptance of the Mexican crown. During his administration of this high office he introduced many important reforms in the navy, and left his post amid universal regret. He was elected Emperor of Mexico by the Assemblea de Notables on the 10th. of July, 1863, but on October 3, following, in an interview at his castle of Miramar, near Trieste, with the Mexican deputation, with despatches to him to request his assumption of the imperial office, he made his acceptance of the crown dependent upon the will of the Mexican people. In his reply to the address of the deputation he said:

"Although the mission of maintaining the welfare of Mexico on a solid foundation, and with free institutions, is a most noble one, I must, nevertheless, in complete accordance with the views of the Emperor Napoleon, declare that the monarchy cannot be re-established on a legitimate and firm basis without a spontaneous expression of the will of the whole nation. I must make my acceptance of the throne dependent on a plebiscite of the whole nation."

With this answer the Mexican delegation returned here with the ostensible object of procuring a popular vote in favor of the proposed empire, but in the scattered and disturbed state of the Mexican people, to obtain a popular vote of any character was evidently impracticable. With this representation the delegation again visited Maximilian, and on the 10th of April he expressed himself satisfied that "the resolution which brought them the first time to Miramar was confirmed by the immense majority of your compatriots, and that he might, with good right, consider himself the legitimate elect of the Mexican people." Immediately afterwards a procès verbal of the acceptance of the crown of Mexico was signed by the parties to the interview, and a convention between France and Mexico was entered into. Soon after this interview Maximilian started for Mexico, stopping at Rome to receive the benediction of the Pope upon the enterprise.—On May 28th he landed at Vera Cruz, and on Sunday, June 12th, entered the city of Mexico. He immediately commenced organizing a new Government, and to afford him a basis of action, he adopted every means for securing information upon the population and resources of the different sections of the country, and an insight into the national character. In order to initiate good feeling, shortly after his installation in the capital he conceded a general amnesty to all prisoners condemned for political offences, and some other classes of offenders. He also sent immediately to Juarez and the Republican leaders, inviting them to attend a conference in the capital for the purpose of discussing a plan for the restoration of peace in the country, and the firm establishment of the Empire. This met with a contemptuous refusal from Juarez, and found as little favor from other leaders. From the first the financial question was the most difficult with which Maximilian had to meet, and a committee which he appointed failed from ignorance of the economical condition of the country to institute any available measures for pecuniary relief. About the middle of August, Maximilian started on a tour of observation, intending to go as far as Zacatecas. Previous to his departure he removed the censorship from the press. On the 3d of November he addressed a letter to his Minister of State, Velasquez de Leon, in which he announced a determination to treat as outlaws the armed adherents to the Republican Government, and commanded all "functionaries, magistrates, and military authorities of the nation to pursue and annihilate them by all means in their power." Financial troubles continued to embarrass the Emperor, and to these were added fresh complications arising from the demands of the ecclesiastics for the restoration of church property confiscated during Liberal administrations. These demands the poverty of the Empire compelled him to refuse, and thus he offended the Church party and the Pope. On October 2, 1865, believing that Juarez, when driven out of Chihuahua, had taken refuge in the United States, Maximilian issued a proclamation announcing the departure of the Republican President from Mexican soil, and declaring his cause utterly lost, and that "the struggle in future will be between honest men and gangs of criminals and bandits." This proclamation was immediately followed by an Imperial decree pronouncing the most vigorous measures against parties in arms against the Government, and declaring that when captured such persons would be shot within twenty-four hours after conviction by court-martial. In accordance with this decree, Generals Ortega and Salazar and several Republicans, being captured at Santa Anna Amaltan on October 13, were, in a few days, summarily executed, notwithstanding that it was probably then known by the Emperor that Juarez's reported abandonment of his cause was unfounded.

The year 1866 opened with the Republic in so crushed and mutilated a condition as to be scarcely recognizable, but soon the Republicans were greatly encouraged by the convention between France and the United States, by which the Emperor of France agreed to withdraw all the French troops from Mexico by November, 1866, while the United States, on the other hand, informed France that she might rely upon our friendship and neutrality. Gradually the Republicans gained important advantages, until, in the latter part of June, General Mejia found himself compelled to surrender the important seaport of Matamoras. This first signal defeat of the Imperialists was followed by a series of other successes of the Republicans, which reduced the territory subject to Maximilian's control to a very small portion of the country. An effort to delay the financial ruin of the country by the appointment of M. Languet as Minister of Finance failed in consequence of the death of Languet, in February. The official announcement of the determination of Louis Napoleon to withdraw all the French troops induced Maximilian to dismiss the Liberal members of his Cabinet and lean again entirely on the Church party, which agreed to supply the immediate wants of the Government by a loan of several millions. His effort to retain a part of the expeditionary force in Mexico entirely failed. A journey undertaken by the Empress Carlotta to Paris and Rome was not only unsuccessful, but entirely broke down the health of the Empress, who became insane. An attempt to create a native army led likewise to no result. On August 16th, on celebrating the anniversary of Mexican independence, Maximilian still promised to defend his throne to the last; but on October 22d, he left the capital, as was generally supposed, with a design to embark at Vera Cruz for Europe, and to abdicate. But this design was prevented by Marshal Bazaine, who insisted that the Emperor must first abdicate before he could leave the country. Soon after Maximilian yielded to the entreaties of the chiefs of the Conservative party and resolved to stay. In a proclamation dated December 5, he expressed a wish to convoke a National Congress on the most liberal basis, so that all parties could participate in the election, but this proclamation met with no response from the liberal leaders. Thus, at the close of the year, the Empire was in a desperate condition, the whole of the country, with the exception of the cities of Mexico, Queretaro, and Vera Cruz, being practically in the hands of the Republicans.

The departure of the French troops, which was completed in the first month of the current year, was soon followed by an entire collapse of the Empire. When the Republican forces on all sides victoriously advanced upon the capital, Maximilian concentrated his troops at Queretaro and placed himself at their head. But gradually the Liberals surrounded the entire Imperial army, which was besieged in Queretaro, and finally the Emperor with his entire force had to surrender. In compliance with a request from the Emperor of Austria, our government interceded for the life of Maximilian, but, as it seems, in vain, for, according to the despatches which we publish this morning, the unfortunate Prince was shot on the 19th. instant.

A sketch of Maximilian, recently published in the Tribune, says of his personal appearance:

Maximilian is rather above the middle height, well proportioned, with powerful, high, square shoulders. In face he is decidedly good looking, having regular features, light hair, long side whiskers and mustache of the same color, a small mouth and excellent teeth, with a good-tempered smile perpetually on his countenance. He has light blue eyes, and a most benevolent and amiable expression of countenance.

In dress he is always scrupulously neat.—A black frock coat, light-colored pantaloons, white vest, and a small black necktie usually constituted his morning costume, while in the evening, at dinner parties, receptions, &c., he wore the usual evening attire of a private gentleman. He very seldom donned uniform, nor was it often worn at his receptions. When occasions of state rendered it necessary, he would appear in the plain dress of a general of the army. He was very fond of the Mexican costume, always adopting it when on horseback or in the country, also when travelling. This consisted of a handsome white sombrero, ornamented with silver, and a silver band round it, or sometimes a plain white French wide-awake hat of very large circumference, a jacket and vest of black or a dark color, handsomely embroidered, and black pants, with double rows of silver buttons down the outside seam of each leg. Sometimes his riding-dress was like the rancheros of the country, namely, jacket, vest, and pants of buff colored leather, usually deer skin, but handsomely embroidered and ornamented like the others.—*N.
