VOL. II. RALEIGH, N. C., THURSDAY, JULY 11, 1867. NO. 285.

THE SENTINEL.

WM. E. PELL, PROPRIETOR.

SECRET POLITICAL SOCIETIES.

Mr. Henry W. Bennett, of Davenport, Iowa, sends us a respectful letter, and it shall receive a respectful reply. We had occasion some days since, while commenting upon the meeting of Congress, to speak our minds of an association known as "The Grand Army of the Republic." We spoke with severity, because we felt the occasion had arrived for a severe expression of opinion. We understand the Grand Army of the Republic to be a secret society, composed of persons calling themselves discharged soldiers of the army, with the purpose of taking part in politics. Mr. Bennett rather denies this, but we are not satisfied with his denial. We scarcely ever can take up a certain class of Western papers without finding that some "Post of the G. A. R. has had a meeting, and resolved that everything is going wrong, and that nothing will go right until some one is hanged, and everybody has a confiscated farm."

In the first place, we call this organization unrepublican. Secret associations to aid in charity, or to develop virtue and friendship, are very well. They rarely interfere with anybody. If people find amusement in meeting in guarded rooms, and wearing spangled dresses, and calling themselves sachems, and brothers, and comrades, soldiers of Gideon, and sons of Rechab, it is their own business. We may doubt their taste, but a man's taste concerns only himself. Sometimes we have vestiges of the Orange sentiment in Ireland in Protestant associations, who meet and swear by the immortal memory of King William and vow to walk knee-deep in Catholic blood. Such vows are harmless figures of speech as long as the police are about. On the other hand, we hear of other societies who propose to re-establish the Catholic church, and scatter confusion among the Protestants. In America, however, these maledictions are merely rhetorical. The Catholic and Protestant churches still live and flourish. The one is dead as an active power; the other has long since departed. In the war there were Sons of Liberty and Knights of the Golden Circle; but their glory was for a day, and it faded like the flowers of the field. When a secret society goes beyond the offices of charity and friendship, it takes no root in America.

The Grand Army of the Republic proposes, according to Mr. Bennett, to "renew associations formed amid the roar of artillery, the lightning of battle, and the thunder of victory." We fear Mr. Bennett but half states his case. The memories of the recent war were, no doubt, very high and holy. There is something sacred in the comradeship which drank from the same canteen. We can understand with what a lusty grasp the comrades of the mess would meet in civil life. If this were all we should be content; but it is not all. These men combine for political purposes. They propose to keep alive the wrath and bitterness of that dreadful time. They mean to control conventions to nominate men for office—to perpetuate in our civil system the bitterness of war. We believe the soldier should receive abundant reward. When a soldier and a civilian apply for office, all things else being equal, we should prefer the soldier. But we dislike this making a privileged class, and especially we dislike this getting into a corner, and having passwords and grips, and making an exclusive class. Washington foresaw this when he opposed the Society of the Cincinnati. He saw in that association the first step toward an aristocracy, and he declined to ally himself with it. Here is an association more numerous and more powerful than the Cincinnati, which proposes to ever keep alive a war with brothers and fellow-countrymen, to exult in victories over Americans, to rejoice over the destruction of men in whose blue veins runs the blood which courses in our own, and who, whatever their crimes or errors, are of our own country. We say, let all fearful memories of the past sink into the hell to which they belong; let us think only of wounds to be healed, of harvests to grow again, of wars once more covered with our commerce, education for the ignorant, protection to the oppressed, justice to all.

We say this, and sacrifice none of the principles defended by Mr. Bennett. He is, no doubt, earnest in his belief that his work is worthy. But there are crafty, bold, bad men who look upon these societies as so many instruments for their own advancement. They propose to ally themselves with this military sentiment, with no more claim upon it than Thenardier in Hugo's novel had to be called the Sergeant of Waterloo. He followed the army, and robbed the bodies of the slain. The true soldier sheathes his sword and buries it in his closet, and it remains an heirloom. He becomes a citizen, and makes no claim for politi- honor but that of citizenship. Above all things, he does not carry his epaulets and ribbons, his wounds and bruises to a political convention, to be knocked down to the highest bidder. There may be many of these men unwittingly in this Army of the Republic, who probably entered with the views of Mr. Bennett.—They will soon see how they may better occupy their time.

Especially do we entertain these views when we find in the declarations of these secret soldier associations so many expressions of madness. The true soldier is the most generous of foemen. Take the great captains who commanded the contending hosts. Do we find Grant, or Sherman, or Sheridan, or Thomas, or Meade assembling together and howling for more blood, more strife, more hate? Do we find Lee, or Longstreet, or Johnson, or Beauregard insisting that the hates of secession shall be prolonged? These men fought their fights and ended. Their anger ceased with the echo of the last guns fired in anger. From this Grand Army of the Republic, now a republic through political conventions in the West commanded by the captains of the caucus, to the Grand Army of the Republic which carried our banners over a hundred fields under the eye of Grant, Sherman, and Sheridan. We denounce this new secret association as out of sympathy with the true Republican party, and as inimical to the Constitution and the Union. It will be a sad day for our party when soldiers find no better work than to prowl over the battle fields of the past, and dig up the bodies of the slain. The country wants peace and rest, and harmony, and justice. These men want a distracted country that offices may be gained. They would make America a Mexico, peace would be sent to sleep with Turks and infidels, and, instead of Union, they would "the wolfiest division make that ever fell upon this cursed earth."—New York Tribune.
