VOL. III. RALEIGH, N. C., THURSDAY, AUGUST 22, 1867. NO. 13.

THE SENTINEL.

WM. E. PELL, PROPRIETOR.

Correspondence from the "Springs."

CATAWBA, Aug. 20th, 1867.

Gentlemen :—This is a great world, is it not? Only think of it! Some people, I am given to understand, are such unbelieving creatures as to assert that the damsel, of whose dancing gyrations I sent you a faithful account, was no damsel at all, but a dreadful male creature, who had induced himself in the garments of femininity, and a wolf in lamb's clothing had thus obtained entrance into the ball-room under false pretences. Fortunately for the credit of my veracity and acuteness of observation, I can refute this calumny by the strongest of all proof,—the damsel in question! The habeas corpus is not abolished, at least not at Catawba, so I can produce the deponent at any specified time, and I will in the meantime send you my affidavit that said deponent is neither more nor less than she was originally declared to be.

I was sitting in Virginia Cottage, a few evenings after the famous dance in the ball-room, when a cheery voice from the front called out:

"Want any peaches?"

I replied in the affirmative, and in walked two women in the garb of citizens, the eldest of whom carried a basket full of the desired fruit.

In the course of arrangements for the transfer of the contents of the basket, (its owner wished to make it a matter of exchange, or barter of "any old truck," i. e. finery, and I preferred a basis founded on an effigy of —— well, it's of no consequence,) I found that I had an original character to deal with, and determined to attempt its further development. She had taken her seat on a large trunk, while the younger woman, or rather girl, was still standing. I asked her to take a seat, and she very promptly and in the most sociable manner placed herself on the side of the bed. As she did so, her bonnet fell to one side, and to my delight the dancing girl was revealed! She had no cause to hide her face, for it was a decidedly attractive one, with clear, honest eyes, and delicate features, though greatly tanned and sun-burnt,—the result, as her mother informed me, of hoeing corn all summer.

We chatted cordially about the crops, &c., and then, as I had hoped, the subject of the dance was introduced. The mother, a bright eyed and sensible woman, took evident pride in the attention her daughter had excited and labored to bring the girl to her opinion.

"Sairey Ann," she said to me, (her given name is Sharving,) "says you all were laughing at her, but I tell her you wan't at all."

I answered her that we were not laughing at her, for we could not be so rude, but that we laughed with her and that her coming had been the means of amusement to all.

"Well, I declare!" said the girl, brightening up greatly; "You see I set and looked at you'uns a gliding and I wanted to jine you so bad, I couldn't stand it. I looked and I looked and I listened to the music and sumthin got in my feet, and I couldn't keep 'em still!"

Here she rose and paced up and down the room, talking as she went. "I looked and I looked and I said I can do it; and you'uns looked so lovely that I thought I'd die ef I didn't jine you'uns, and the first thing I knew I was thur!"

I begged her to come "thur" again, and told her mother we hoped she would come, too. With a delighted smile, she said she'd "like to," for her husband was a fiddler and she knew all about "tunes."—"But," she continued, putting out her foot, "I can't come with you'uns in such shoes as this. If any body'll give me a frock, a pair of store shoes and a set of new hoops, I'll come and I'll dance down the whole set of you'uns, or know the reason why."

My visitors were so well pleased with their entertainment that I think they would have remained for an indefinite period, if a summons for my presence at the Bath-house had not forced me to break up the company.

A volume might well be written on the beauties of that bath and the fun and frolics which are perpetrated thereat and therein. The bath house is a long rectangular building, with a high open roof, and a broad platform running round two sides of its entire length, upon which the private rooms open. Ropes are provided for the gymnastic exercises of the bathers, and one of them possesses the remarkable property, when one swings by it, of "when your feet come up, you can't get them down again!" and is in consequence much shunned by those who prefer to have their pedal extremities down.

On entering the house, the crowd scatters, each lady disappearing, as a lady, within the limits of her room, and for a while a suggestive silence covers a set of white, green, blue and scarlet costumes, forming a cross between Zouaves, Highlanders, and full dress Bloomers, and then ensues a scene which may be better imagined than described. Timid souls linger trembling on the brink of the platform, or steal shiveringly down the steps and take their dose by installments of a toe at a time, thus dying by inches. Bold spirits leap to the centre of the water, disappear in a cloud of foam and emerge rosy and radiant, while silence is exchanged for laughs, screams, shouts, and screeches at every intonation and with every variation which the female voice is capable of producing.

Well, gentlemen, nature is a great institution,—a profound sentiment, which I repeat at each successive view of the entire arrangements of our Catawba bath-house.

Having given you this bird's eye glimpse of the bathers, I must, in some subsequent letter, sketch for your amusement, Uncle, Esquire, our Knight of the bath, and without as great an institution as the aforesaid nature herself.

We have been having lots of fun lately, in the shape of a very handsome bridal party, which Colonel Wyatt gave to a party, who are passing, at Catawba, the first few weeks of the life upon which they have entered, and also a fancy and mask ball.

This latter was gotten up in the most impromptu manner, and with little or no facilities, yet its success was sufficient to have warranted the supposition that weeks of labor had been bestowed upon it. It was a varied and a beautiful scene, and one well worth enjoying. Lallah Rookh, as beautiful as a poet's dream after taking Hasheesh, glided through the dance with Fra Diavolo, while Diana, the most exquisitely charming head and face that ever rose above the snowy shoulders of sweet seventeen, floated on in serene loveliness and dispensed brightness and beauty to all beholders.

Friar Tuck danced with a vivacity that forcibly reminded me of that celebrated cell of the Clerk of Copshurst, and its jovial inmates. Aurora moved with Queenly tread through her clouds of rose and blue. A Gleaner reaped not the fields of Boaz, but much mirth and enjoyment. A Gypsy and a Tambourina were mysterious and merry. A Cigar-girl gave every one cause to become a lover of the weed. A Shepherdess seemed to gather more things than her sheep with her slight crook, while a Spanish Lady needed only the Castanets and a duenna to recall the Guadelquiver and its golden banks. Toodles and Mrs. Toodles were decidedly merry. The entire Press was present. A Castilian Hidalgo and a Modern Greek met in affable association. A Highlander and a gentleman from Cork were arm in arm, while deceptive appearances repeated a mythological miracle and converted a little boy into a young lady! Well, it was all very pretty and very merry, and if, as I hold as a fundamental doctrine, one makes people better by making them happier, we Catawba folks ought to be mighty good!

A special hack brought over, on Friday, a load of law and learning to enrich Catawba. Judge Gilliam has been holding Court in the adjoining county and had come with Hon. Burton Craig and Mr. Bailey, of Salisbury, and several others, to take a breathing spell here. A more impressive or dignified looking couple than the two first can scarcely be found, and had it come the week before, it would have been converted into a trio by another forensic luminary, Mr. William A. Wright, who was here at that time.

The Bar is at present unrepresented, as the party to which I refer has gone on its lawful way.

In the mean time the sun shines brighter, the waters sparkle more clearly, myriads of little birds and bevies of butterflies fill the trees and grass, and the air grows purer and more rarefied as the summer begins to grow into autumn. That purity and crystalline clearness of the atmosphere is really wonderful, and is best expressed by the remark of my stately maid, as she stood last night gazing up into the illimitable Universe:

"Miss Fanny, seems to me the stars are nearer to us here!"

I trust we are nearer to them and that one of these days we will find in some of them the "many mansions" which I believe they represent.

Most truly, P. D.
