VOL. III. RALEIGH, N. C., FRIDAY, AUGUST 30, 1867. NO. 20.

THE SENTINEL.

WM. E. PELL, Proprietor.

Correspondence from the "Springs."

CATAWBA, Aug. 27, 1867.

Gentlemen:—You are not in favor of long epistles, yet how can you expect to be successful in laying an embargo on the feminine privilege of using a pen when word of mouth is out of the question? I will condense, as much as possible, the chat I wish to hold with you, but should I say too much, let "off with his head" into the waste basket be my epistolary fate.

We have had lots of fun since I wrote last, the principal event of Catawba life having been the Tournament, which came off on Thursday afternoon. Colonel Wyatt said we should have one, but as there was no stir nor appearance of preparation, and the time for arranging the matter was so short, many of us thought that, overcome by the great difficulties of the undertaking, the Colonel had quietly abandoned it. Not he! He had said that on the 22nd. inst., the Tournament should take place, and on the 22nd. instant it did take place, thus proving Col. Wyatt a man of the word-as-good-as-his-bond-sort, and affording a delightful recreation not only to his guests, but to hundreds of others. From early morning they began to pour into the Springs proper, all dressed in holiday suits and with faces as beaming as the day itself; and before long the lovely hill-sides and little vales were clothed with groups and couples all intent on enjoyment and lending a new and varied interest to the scene. I am told not less than five hundred persons, besides the regular guests, were here, and to my eyes there appeared double that number, so great was the crowd.

At four in the afternoon we walked to the lists, which were arranged about a half a mile from the Springs, and about which seats had been placed.

One could write a chapter on the variety of nature, human nature and French human nature, here congregated, but I pass it over, as well as a minute description of the lists. They were arranged as all others have been from the days of Ivanhoe down, and the same preliminaries, on the part of the eight Knights who entered, were observed that have always been peculiar to the circumstances under which they acted.

Four of the Knights were from Charlotte, three from Catawba, and one from Durham's, dear to all smokers, and all were fully alive to the exigencies of the hour and determined to achieve success.

The selection of Marshal was admirably made, as Major J. A. Engelhard filled that office. At the head of the Knights he rode down the lists, and as they formed in line in obedience to a wave of his hand, he removed his hat and addressed them. This speech was short, but each word was replete with beauty, touching pathos and thrilling memories. He began by a tribute to those Knights who had fought in a cause which is more glorious in defeat than anything on earth not connected with it—those noble martyrs

"Whose bones are dust,
And their souls are with the saints, we trust."

Well did he omit the intervening line

"And their good swords rust,"

No speck of tarnish or decay corrodes the memories of our dead! Individual love has encrusted them with an amalgam which defies the action of the elements and what was their Country will preserve them through all time!

But to return to the beautiful speech and the noble deduction which its utterer evolved from the example of those who have gone before, and those who still survive.—This was that lessons taught by our four years school contained the true principles and highest virtues of knighthood and chivalry, and that those who have learned them should apply them to every condition and detail of every day life, and thus permeate society with their healthful and benign influences.

With a special address to the Knights, Major Engelhard ended his speech, and as he rode off on his white horse, he rose in the stirrups, and, looking over the long and dense line, which stood near him, said: "If any of my brave men are here, will they please step forward!"

And, gentlemen, they came!—five of them, fine, determined looking men, though one of them had left a good arm to mark the prowess it had done, in some distant battle field. There they stood, in the dear old gray jackets, every seam and crease of which was resonant with unspoken eloquence, and whose buttons, dim and dull as they now seemed, were each indicative of a glorious record. [You will easily infer from the fact of the said buttons remaining in statu quo, that, in this blissful region, the name of Provost Marshal is unknown.]

The Knights rode off to the starting point in fine style, and the golden sunshine flooded the scene with radiance, but the sight of these five noble fellows affected me as the appearance of Cato's sword in Cæsar's triumph did the Romans. The more so that the band was playing an air, which somehow has so twisted and tangled itself up with our heart strings that they thrill and resound to its every note; to which we have an inalienable right and which we hold in fee simple possession, our DIXIE.

Doubtless the moisture came to many eyes as to mine, but it was crushed back.—We Southern women are crying with our hearts for our cause and our dead all the time, but we are too true to both to paralyze the efforts of those who are now striving more nobly in the fight of duty, than ever they fought on bloody fields, by an unwomanly repining.

Sad thoughts were put to flight, by the excitement of the scene, which increased with each successive round.

The Knights labored under great disadvantages, the principal one being the impossibility of procuring proper horses. It is strange, gentlemen, but the way in which our fine horses have disappeared is a subject worthy the investigation of a lover of his species. Have they, like Macbeth's witches, "made themselves air?" Has a Morelos en Chenal been opened here as well as in Paris? or has John Morrell with his gang risen from the dead?

Be the cause what it may, the effect is the same, and in the words of an honest countryman "our critters aint nowhare,—least ways no whar about these parts!" Despite this fact, the Knights did their duty gradly, and all rode well, white in several cases the horsemanship was admirable. Success and victory were equally distributed and the contest was a close one, and many a young heart bounded with hope or fear as to the lance on which the final triumph would perch.

At last it was over, and graceful riders, blushing girls and expectant spectators stood still to hear the verdict of the judges. It was awarded Mr. J. R. Green, of Durham, who had not only taken the ring the same number of times as his competitors, but had by his management of "Shelby," his horse, made the distance, at each round, in the surprisingly short space of five seconds. This gentlemen, who is known far and near by his good works, is the proprietor of the celebrated Durham Tobacco Manufactory, and though I never use the article to which he deals except through a masculine medium, I hold him as one of the benefactors of his race. His reputation for high principle, strict justice and keen sense of honor came with him to Catawba, and his lively and agreeable manners have made him one of the greatest favorites in the place. Unfortunately for the position in which his good riding placed him, he is not only married, but very married! On the strength of this, it was hinted that he had best resign the fruits of his victory to the hands of one the unmarried aspirants. He coolly, but most decidedly, declined, and announcing his determination to reserve the announcement of his choice of Queen till 9 o'clock and in the Ball room, he went to the rear.

The awards of the right to choose 1st, 2nd. and 3rd. Maids of Honor were then made: the first being to Colonel Wyatt, and the others to Mr. T. H. Orr, the Knight of Charlotte, a gentleman whose fine riding was universally admired, and Mr. James Robbins, of Catawba. This gentleman had appeared as the Knight of the Forest, in an Indian costume, admirably gotten up, and his riding was remarkably fine.

This ceremony ended the Tournament, and a general move in the direction of the Springs took place, which place being reached, a complete scattering ensued, as all disappeared to get ready for the ball.

In due time the hour for the important announcement arrived and feminine excitement had reached its climax. It was not kept in suspense. Mr. Green stepped forward, holding a beautiful wreath composed of fine white flowers, studded with silver, and in clear tones delivered his speech, placed the crown on the jetted head of Miss Sadie Wyatt, and hailed her as the Queen of Catawba. As she bowed her stately head, to receive it, all supposed the ceremony completed, but were most pleasantly disappointed, for, rising to her full stature, she accepted the royal trust thus bestowed and replied to her Knight in an admirable little speech, most charmingly delivered, and affording conclusive proof that the literary reputation she has obtained in her native Baltimore is richly deserved.

As every one likes to know how a Queen is dressed, I will state that her Majesty of Catawba was attired in plain white Poplin, high necked and with flowing sleeves, trimmed with white ribbon, and that her toilette was completed by a full set of exquisite pearls. The choice and crown of First Maid of Honor was then conferred upon Miss Maggie Downing, whose face was converted, by so unexpected a compliment, to the hue of the flesh coloured tarletane and pink rosebuds which she wore.

The Diana of our fancy ball was now duly installed, as Second Maid of Honor, and right royally did she appear. Richmond claims this fair lady and may well be proud to do so.

The wreath of the Third Maid of Honor was placed on the magnificent raven ringlets of Miss Fannie Bugg, a young lady whom Augusta, Georgia, has contributed to the other charms of Catawba, and then the ceremonies of the evening ended.

A royal Quadrille was formed of the Queen and her Court, and the Knights, who were not able to offer the crown to their respective "Ladyes," laid at their little feet an amount of loyal devotion which well replaced it.

Don't growl, please, over the length of this letter. How could I tell you all I had to tell in less space? I tried Sydney Smith's suggestion of scratching out every other word, but it would'nt answer and "what is writ is writ."

Most truly,

F. D.

Having been notified that a patent has been allowed me for a new and improved COTTON PRESS, I offer for sale State, County and individual rights.

This press is offered as combining more advantages for packing Cotton than any now in use. I have permission to refer to Governors Graham, Peter F. Smith, W. H. Smith, D. Dimmock and T. Vaughan, of Scotland Neck, N. C., all of whom have used it with great satisfaction on their plantations. Those who put up screws will be sorry for it.
