VOL. III. RALEIGH, N. C., TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1867. NO. 41.

THE SENTINEL.

WM. E. PELL, PROPRIETOR.

THE SITUATION THROUGH RADICAL SPECTACLES.

Theodore Tilton, in this week's Independent, is urged by a friend to use his pen briskly, "to prepare the nation for the coming inevitable impeachment of President Johnson." Theodore tells his friend that no preparation is ready, the Universal World (Radical) being ready for it. He adds the following method to accomplish it instantly:

"If it could be now thoroughly understood (as it ought to be) that the Republican party means to omit from the list of Presidential candidates next summer all its Senators, Governors and Generals, who are now opposing the impeachment of the President, all such opposition would instantly cease, and the President would be speedily put out of the way."

Theodore then publishes a communication from a Chicago correspondent, which is characterized as speaking the views of many advisers, which correspondent discourses in the following strain:

"War is imminent. You know it. All clear-sighted men know it. Capitalists realize it. Gold feels it, and jumps to 145‡ in your city. The masses understand it.—The press has sounded the alarm. Everybody is anxious, save copperheads and rebels, who have their "calling and election sure" in Andrew Johnson. The rebels understand that war is coming.

But how can the President be checked? How can the loyal masses confront him? How can the people say to Andrew Johnson, Thus far shalt thou go, and no further? How can they demonstrate to him that the people rule?

The people have a representative body in the Government—Congress. But Congress is dispersed. Have the people no other servants? Yes. They have State Legislatures. Through them they can speak, and more—act. Hence I urge upon you, as a controlling power over public sentiment, to think of the proposition that has been made in the West calling for a Convention of the loyal Governors.

I heartily sympathize with the call. The Governors can summon their legislatures together in extraordinary session. These State legislatures will be fresh from the people.—They will be the mouth pieces of the people, and as such can instruct the Governors to call a Convention. The Governors, then, backed by their Legislatures, representing the loyal masses, can with power and right declare to the President that they will prevent him by force, if necessary, from bringing on a new war.

General Grant, although I regard him as only a mere "protest," is in a position to help save the country. If he finds that the people are thoroughly organized, through their State Governors, who can command a million bayonets, he will be more inclined to disobey the President's military orders than if those bayonets lay in State arsenals unrepresented.

Something must be done at once. Johnson means revolution. Revolution can be met only by another. It may be necessary before November to imprison Mr. Andrew Johnson, to save us from war, or prevent the surrender of Washington to the Maryland rebels. Who can do it? General Grant. By whose orders? The people's, transmitted through their State Governors."

Theodore does not share the alarm of his correspondent, but says, if Andrew Johnson make an attempt at war against the republic, let him be tried by a court-martial, and shot by twelve soldiers, in a hollow square.

So we go.

GENERAL MOWER'S ORDER.

A gentleman recently from Louisiana, and well acquainted with the condition of affairs in that State, called on us yesterday to bear his personal testimony to the false and calumnious character of the statement in the Chronicle of yesterday, relative to the order of General Mower forbidding armed assemblies within that district. The Chronicle assumes that this order refers to organizations having in view a revival of the rebellion, and got up in the interest of the disloyal. It is the slight and only foundation upon which it rests its latest startling development of a new traitorous conspiracy to overturn the Government by armed force. Now, the truth is, that the armed meetings referred to in General Mower's order are those of the negroes who, under the direction of agents of the Freedman's Bureau, and of the Radical committees, are in the habit of meeting in secret assembly in the towns and villages, and posting armed sentinels within and on the outskirts to challenge and intercept all persons who may be going to and from their several duties. So great an evil and nuisance had this become in Louisiana that the planters in a body petitioned General Sheridan to abate it.—Hence this order. In further evidence of the falsity of this statement, we may state the well-known fact that negroes alone in Louisiana are permitted to bear arms and organize into political and secret assemblies.—National Intelligencer.

HUMORS OF REGISTRATION.—I was conversing a few days ago with a very intelligent mulatto who fills the position of registrar at one of the parish precincts about thirty miles from the city, and was much struck with the views he expressed concerning the practical effects of the registry upon future elections. He remarked that of the country negroes whom he had seen transformed into legal voters he believed at least a third would forfeit their newly acquired privilege by reason of their inability to remember the names under which they registered. Under the slavery regime surnames were a luxury altogether unknown to the blacks, but as Pompey, Cæsar, July and Pitney were fairly sufficiently distinctive appellations for the registry lists, it became necessary to improvise and affix a surname to every applicant for the franchise. In most cases this was done very simply by assigning to newly-liberated citizen the surname of his late master; but in very many instances the most fanciful or ridiculous names were bestowed, with a strict injunction to the recipients to hold fast to their new titles, though their incapacity to recall them for mnemonic lore was perfectly apparent. It was assured that such names as Hamburg, Manchausen, and Sancho Penas figure frequently and conspicuously on the list. While the field hands are as eager to register as their less benighted brethren in the towns and cities, few of them have any definite idea of the object of the process. The impression is almost universal among them that it is an operation somehow preliminary to their obtaining an allotment of the lands of their late masters; and it is a common thing to find them slyly bespeaking from the registrars the selection of a good tract. Disputes often arise on the important question whether the Government is to furnish mules as well as lands—the negro logic running somehow in this wise: "For what's de use of bein' sot free widout lands?—And what's the use of de lands widout mules?" These and a thousand incidents equally ludicrous are of daily occurrence at every precinct in the interior.—Charleston letter to New York Times.

A person entitled to know something about the subject has told us that one of the most intricate and valuable ciphers used by the rebel government in communicating with their spies in the North, in the early times of the war, consisted merely in the application of the Sanscrit alphabet to the spelling of the English words; that is to say, the words used in the secret dispatches were English, but the Sanscrit characters were employed in their formation. All that was necessary for any person to read and understand the dispatches was simply for him to learn the Sanscrit alphabet, which can be done very quickly; but of course our officers were not in that secret. As the number of persons in this country who know Sanscrit is exceedingly small, the rebels carried on this ingenious system for a long time with impunity. We may remark that the idea of applying to one language the characters of another in this way was not novel with the rebels. We have seen in this city a very curious book, printed in England in the early part of this century, in which, for a particular reason, the Greek character is applied to the spelling of English words throughout the entire volume.—N. Y. Times.
