The writer heard The Norfolk Day Book gives Dr. that speech from Mr. Taylor, who is said to be a striker in the Holden shop, and who occasionally strikes off to other places to find himself chased up and devoured as he was by Dr. Buchanan, at Buckborn, and by Col. McNeill, at Lillington. We were not present when the Doctor drew his scalpel, or rather his scalping knite and tomahawk upon him, but understand the dissection was complete, insomuch that the most able Naturalist would have been at loss in say-ing to what race the remains of the creature belonged.

In reply to his strictures on sheriff Grady, the sheriff told him that he had authority for what he had done. Then Fontleroy asked to see the order; the sheriff drew it from his pocket and read it. Thus finding his blunderbuss spiked, he isunched off by telling the Leagues that they had a right to march, use their banners and music, despite of the sheriff or Gen. Canby or any body else. He did not tell them they had a right to drill, but it is well known that this has been openly encouraged by some of the League orators—for instance, by Fontieroy's brother Leaguer from Moore, Jordan Barrett.

Next he rejoiced that the South had been hadly whipped and proved his calibre and veracity by chatging that Gen. Lee had or-dered 36 deserters to be hung with a grape vine without trial. On being asked if he vouched for the fact, he said he did; that Wesly Counsel, of Chatham, had informed him of the fact and authorized him to use his name. At this slander of the veturan Hero, whom even the enemy held in respect, much indignation was manifested in the Lee and told the crowd that Font did not believe it himself. The place was getting too warm for Font, and he left for Raleigh whilst the Colonel was finishing him.
