been influenced by Government subjection of them to severe laws, what would they have left undone to maintain that happy state, while in Indiana and elsewhere in the North, this feeling is indulged by overbold, if not encouraged by apathy, though utterly unjustifiable on any special grounds, in the South, with causes of exasperation irretrievable in human nature, the least indication of assuaging tenderness is spread on every independent, elaborated from every pulpit, and disseminated on every street corner as proof of the fidelity of Southern citizens to participation in the government of the Constitution.

THE RECONSTRUCTION FRAUD
No American having that patriotic sense of freedom which wrought its imperishable record on Bunker Hill, at Bunker's independence Hall in 1776, or in the States before 1860, has ever expected anything but failure of measures by the aid of which British tyranny was a total and unrelenting banishment. It is something to be proud of which, like the stupor of the South, will not scruple to give the "conservative" block of recidivists negroes, a seat at the table of the Reconstruction, and to be the first to see that the Reconstruction is working badly. If Congress declares that it is right in principle, and is not to be changed in any respect, then it must either provide means for carrying it through and maintaining it by force, or it cannot stand a day without the support of an army and a fleet. We have emphasized for the public the candid point, that the attempt to impose negro government on the white freemen of Northern States would prove a national calamity and irreparable mischief in the history of our people. It is a national calamity, and it is a national calamity. It is a national calamity, and it is a national calamity.
