THE PLATEAU.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

From the National Intelligencer.]
The full report of the platform adopted at New York differs very materially from the imperfect synopsis which was published through the Associated Press. It is worthy of the occasion of the Convention, and of the great cause which it represents. There is no equivocation, subterfuge, or evasion in any declaration. Every principle is set forth boldly, clearly and emphatically, so that he who reads may read. Instead of the ambiguities adopted at Chicago to cover up doubtful purposes, or to conceal a mongrel policy, this platform confronts each issue distinctly, deals with it broadly, and leaves no doubt to combat by the employment of artful phrases.

The shrewd, frank, uprightness, and corruption of Radicalism are exposed with a candor and courage which the emergency demanded, and the remedies proposed are announced in language equally emphatic and satisfactory. What the platform demands is absolute, and unqualified reform is the government as the only means of preserving our institutions. We seek to restore the country to its former position of peace and prosperity, to revive the Constitution in all its vigor, and to set up again the time-honored landmarks which Radicalism has torn down. All these objects and others of material interest, are included under the general idea of a thorough and efficient reform in the government, which shall sweep away every vestige of that factional domination that has brought us to the very verge of national bankruptcy, and made imminent another civil war.

The platform requires no explanation or commendation. It claims its own praise in the national creed which is laid down, and which, we venture to say, will enlist the sympathy and the active support of a vast majority of the American people. It will carry cheer to thousands of hearts and rouse a feeling such as has not been witnessed for a quarter of a century. The flat has gone north. It is not a question of party, but of patriotism. Hundreds of thousands of old Whigs and moderate Republicans, who toiled for their political organization while it was possible to do so, have renounced all connection with Radicalism and will go forward as zealous supporters of this noble cause.

Every word of the platform deserves to be treasured up, and we cannot too strongly commend it to earnest reflection.

(From the Philadelphia Age.)

The platform presented by the Convention is on all points explicit, and conforms to the time honored principles of the party. That the regulation of the suffrage belongs to the States is a fundamental truth upon which our federal form of government rests; the attempt to overthrow it was a radical and revolutionary assault on the institutions of our country. The Democratic platform is faithful to the Constitution and the laws, around which all who hope to rescue our country from a military despotism must now rally. The extinction of slavery and secession are expressly recognized, in a manner that is appropriate, though the subjects have passed out of the region of controversy.

The monetary questions are not explicitly, in no ambiguous terms, and as fully as is possible in the brief formula of resolutions.

The proposed taxation of the bonds is in conformity with the resolution lately passed by the vote of the Radicals in the House of Representatives. We allude to the fact as taking this branch of the subject out of the sphere of mere partisan recrimination. The practical details of it must be the subject of future legislation.

Other features in the platform are those on which our views have been so often uttered that we will not recur to them to-day. They are principles on which the Democratic party have over been ready to stand or fall; and if the latter, free popular government falls with them.

(From the New York World.)

The platform which was adopted yesterday by the National Convention, with a demonstrative warmth of approval such as has seldom been witnessed on a similar occasion, is on the whole, a body of sound political doctrine.

(From the New York Herald.)

It is a good platform, and in the main one which we have been advocating for a long time. No one can complain that it does not cover a good deal of ground, for it embraces all the political questions of the time.

(From the Wheeling Register.)

Taken altogether, it is a platform upon which every honest man and true lover of his country can stand.

The New York World thus describes the action of Tammany in connection with the reading of the National Democratic platform:

"The reading of the platform, which was at once a pledge, a history, and an indictment, had concluded, there was a silence that could be felt for several seconds. Then, as the tension of attention wore off, and as the commanding member of the occupying was a master of lively apprehension, some measured man, in the Microcosm delegation, got up and made his own vindictive response. He declared that the grand object he needed only an example to set all going. The whole convention—it more than 500 delegates and alternates—the immense mass of outside spectators, the dignified countenances of the platform, all arose and began to thank God with terrific bursts. Not less the exasperability of the declarations of principles than the surcharged feelings of the mighty multitude, demanded an immediate expression of long pent-up pleasure. For nearly five minutes the record can only be a record of abounding acclamations. Every man became a personal herald, blunderbuss in hand, the overflowing eyes of many, and then waved in mid-air, as the standards of an immense army. State after State came, with a vastness of volume which was extraordinary. Delegates greeted delegates by names, words, salutations, gestures; and the surrounding sea of men and women became possessed by the same spirit of glee and good will, and high hope for the meeting future."

A drunken man fell asleep on the roadside, where a pig found him and began to tickle him in the mouth. "What's killing me now?" exclaimed the drunkard, "what a capital thing it is to be in favor with the women."
