PASSAGE OF THE SOUTHERN ELECTORAL BILL BY CONGRESS—CONTINUANCE OF THE FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

WASHINGTON, July 13.

The bill or joint resolution in relation to the electoral votes of the Southern States has finally passed both Houses, and was immediately enrolled and presented to the President last night. The Senate, at the earnest solicitation of Mr. Trumbull and Mr. Sherman, excluded from the provisions of the bill Arkansas and Florida, whose Representatives are now sitting in both Houses, but the House of Representatives was afraid to trust these two States, and in effect put them back in the bill by striking out the clause "and which States are not now represented in Congress." The insertion of the proviso "that nothing herein contained shall be construed to apply to any State which was represented in Congress on the 4th of March, 1867," is a saving clause for Tennessee. The Senate late yesterday afternoon sanctioned the action of the House, but by a small majority.

The reason given for the passage of this new radical scheme was that the Johnson (so-called) governments might attempt to hold elections for electors of President and Vice President, and to prevent any misapprehension or confusion it was necessary to proclaim beforehand that no election would be regarded as valid unless it occurred under the Congressional governments. This excuse has not even the merit of plausibility. There is not a trace of the governments set up by the President left in either North Carolina, Arkansas or Florida, nor in three months from now will there be in any of the other States of the South.—The only object of this bill is to secure the entire Southern electoral vote for Grant.

By another bill passed yesterday the freedmen's bureau is continued in all these States until the first of January next. The present radical commissioner, General Howard, is placed beyond the President's power of removal, and in case he should die, then his Adjutant General, Whittlesey, who is as "sound" as he "on the goose," is to succeed him. All this is, of course, clearly outside the Constitution, but what does that matter? General Howard is expected to vote the negroes early and often. The radicals think that there is no reasonable doubt but the bureau will do the work effectually, but there is a probability of failure, and hence, to guard against all accidents, this electoral bill has been engineered through.

If by hook or by crook the electoral votes of the ten States are ostensibly thrown for the radical ticket, well and good; but if there should happen to be a fair expression of public sentiment, and any one or more of the States should go for the Democrats, then its or their vote will be thrown out. Some of the members wanted six to include Tennessee in the bill, but they were soon satisfied by the members from that State that, under Brownlow's manipulations, there was no earthly probability of anything going wrong in his principality.

The constitutional time allowed the President to return this bill will not expire until the end of Sunday's intervening, and Congress will not adjourn until he returns it.—Some of the President's friends think he will not keep the bill any longer than is necessary to prepare his veto, as he has no desire to put any obstacle in the way of an early adjournment. If we were not satisfied by past experience how individual opinion bends to party discipline, there might be some hope that Mr. Trumbull and other Senators, who opposed this bill, would sustain a veto.

WHAT THE RADICALS HAVE DONE FOR THE SOUTH.

From a speech made by General Hampton at a public meeting in New York, during the recent Convention, we extract the following:

I will only state a few facts, for it is a thing upon which I do not speak. In the Legislature of South Carolina, composed of 156 members—[Cries of 'Hear, hear,' from whose halls used to go forth as high intellect as ever came to the halls of Congress—of those one hundred and fifty-six members there are nearly, if not quite, now, one hundred negroes. [Hisses, and cries of 'Shame.'] Of these negroes and all of that Legislature, the whole taxes that they are liable to pay amount to seven hundred dollars.—[Oh, oh,' and laughs.] Of that about five hundred dollars have been paid by one of the wealthiest natives in the State, and the two hundred dollars that are to be paid by negroes and carpet-baggers, half of it is under execution. (Applause and laughter.) Well, that Legislature, composed in that way, has the right to impose a levy or tax on South Carolina to the amount of $10,250,000.—(Applause.) Now, gentlemen, that State of things can go on what will be the result? Why, you know it means that in a few years from this time, there will not be a white man, woman or child in the State of South Carolina. (Cries of 'No, no.') I only mention that as one of the Southern States. It is true that it is perhaps in a worse condition than most of the others, but they are all afflicted by that fearful calamity that is hanging over us, and we can have no relief unless the Democratic party will come out and pledge itself that we shall have a fair election; that the white people of the South shall vote.—I want you all to register an oath, that when they do vote, that their vote shall be counted, and if there is a majority of white voters, that you will place Seymour and Blair in the White House in spite of all the bayonets that shall be brought against them.—We only want to see the election fair. If they do that, and even with the incubus of black rule, we can carry the South at least. (Applause.) Gentlemen, (as I said,) I do not like to touch upon these themes. (Cries of 'Good, good.') I only proposed to come here to make my acknowledgments to you. I come to tell you that these nominations which you have made will meet with the hearty concurrence of the Southern people. I wanted to tell you how grateful we have been at the reception that you have given to us. I wanted to tell you that though we fought in good faith, we laid down our arms in good faith. (Great applause.) I wanted you to believe that we were sincere in saying, and that while we meant war when we said war, when we said peace we meant peace; not that peace which the Radicals would give us ['no, no']; not that peace which crushes to earth ten of these States; not that peace which places the ignorant negro over us; but the peace in all our households, peace through all our land; that peace which the great Democratic party has sworn to day at Tammany Hall we shall have.

[A voice.—"We will have it."]

[Another voice.—"You are our white brothers."] I appeal, gentlemen, to that sentiment. I appeal in the name of race.—I appeal to you by our common traditions in the past. I appeal to your memory of that time when South Carolina sent her soldiers to fight here and at Boston. I appeal to you by the memories of the Revolution. I appeal to you by all the past, by every hope of the future, to stand together and give us deliverance, and to give success to these nominations of the men whom you have made your standard-bearers today. [Applause.] Now, gentlemen, in the name of the Southern States—in the name of South Carolina—in my own name—I thank you for the courtesies you have extended to us since we have been here. I thank you for the reception, and assure you that I shall take back to my people nothing but the most grateful memories of your kindness. [Applause.]

GEN. LEE.

The following is the conclusion of an address on "Integrity of Character," delivered at the Commencement of the Kentucky Military Institute, June 4th, 1868, by Rev. R. A. Holland;

"I rejoice, young gentlemen, that I can find an embodiment of this sublime integrity of character in a hero—not of the Past but of the Present—not of some distant realms, but of your own suffering section—not of foreign birth, but of blood brother to that which throbs thrills of enthusiasm through your veins at the mention of his name. I rejoice that we possess a model of manhood worth more to our noblest attributes than all the fortunes spent in the terrible war that revealed his grandeur to our gaze.

"Whatever may have been the errors of the South—errors for which, if they existed, she has by dearest hecatombs sufficiently atoned; the world is indebted to her for a gift that will enrich mankind forever. That gift is the example of a man who, in civil conflict, wins the admiration of his enemies, who charms envy into love and awes malice into silence, who comes forth from among the smoke and carnage of battle revealing a brow unstained with dishonor and hands unclotted with cruelty, who, although raising in a hundred fights against such odds of troops and treasures as skill never vanquished before, suffers no word of boasting to soil his pure lips, and notices his success only in modest ascriptions of gratitude to the Lord of Hosts; who, marching forward in the perilous path of duty, refuses a moment's pause for dalliance with the Fame which others must follow, but which, like one entranced, tracks his steps and courts the condescension of his kingly glance; who as he kneels under triumphs, rises above reverses, and when the last blow is struck and genius can no longer cope with force, surrenders his sword with the same equanimity with which he had ever wielded it, and receives it back from the conqueror in mute testimonial that none but himself is worthy to wear a weapon whose blade blazes with a lustre of purity and prowess, bright as the scimetars of Eden's sentinels.

"Great in victory, greater still in defeat; great as described through the red haze of war, greater still, as contemplated through the clear air of peace; great as a general, but greatest as a man—behold him a character which, if not perfect, conceals its faults with the refulgence of its virtues, even as the sun conceals the spots on its dazzling disc. I need not call his name; nor need History when she carves for the highest niche in her Pantheon a statue to represent manhood apotheosized by its own glory, inscribe beneath it a name, which the very design of the statue speaks aloud—the immortal name of Lee."

A DOUBLE ACROSTIC.

He is our chosen chieftain; he shall lead
O'er victor fields the country to success;
Reduce the taxes, save us in our need,
And, making greater freedom, make laws less.
This trust we place in him, nor doubts our fears
Invade our perfect faith. We know this man
On whom the wid'ning circles of the years
Shed larger lustre. Let the critic scan
Each act of his whole life with sharpest ken
Yet he shall find no flaw; he is, indeed,
Most earnest, generous, kindly of all men.
Oh, worthy countrymen, I pray give heed;
