GEM BUTLER ON MASSACHUSETTS CHARITIES.

The following is an extract from a speech recently made at Charlestown, Mass., by Gen. Butler:

According to the statistics furnished by the General State Legislature, as a report of their own committee, it is more dangerous to spend a year in a Massachusetts almshouse than it would have been to have led the charge of the Zouaves at Magenta. I see that the statement strikes some of you with dread—let me repeat. There was a larger proportion of the regiment which lost in the attack of the battle at Bollerino came out from the battle, than there were of the paupers of 1858 who came out alive from the State almshouses of Massachusetts. [Senation.] How allow me to give you the figures. How many was the average number of paupers in the State almshouses during the year 1858? Twenty-seven hundred and some odd. How many died in the year ending October, 1858? Six hundred and sixty-six—one in every four. Every fourth man, woman and child that went into the State almshouses of Massachusetts died and was buried in the Potter's field of a pauper's burying ground. Three hundred and forty-one children, under the age of five years, died in those charnel houses, and the physician of one of these houses says he does not expect to rear but three percent of the children brought there under one year old! Three out of a hundred—all the other ninety-seven go to a nameless grave.

Why this whole commonwealth felt outraged because there came a report from Kansas that six or eight men had been killed; and yet our mothers and wives and daughters scourred the country for old clothes and other comforts to send the people of that Territory. [Laughter]. In the same year three hundred and odd children, of Massachusetts, soiled, died like dogs in a kennel in our own almshouses, while we were weeping over the imaginary wrongs of Kansas! [Cheers!] Again I ask, my friends, is it not true that we look at home? Who is Mr. Stowe? Who is Greeley in the Tribune? Who is the extra philanthropy of the humanitarians? Where is that deaconess of great and good men, Wendell Phillips? Where are all these men who regulate the affairs of the people star off? Is there not ample room for their charities here at home? One hundred and sixty-five children dying at Bridgewater; one hundred and fifteen at Tewksbury, and one hundred and one at Munson! Forty infants dead in two months! Oh! but they were white children. [Laughter.] Why look after them? I do not wish to harrow your feelings further by going into statistics. I only ask you if it is not time we ceased to look after the wrecks of the negroes at the South, and took a little after the people at home?

But if any know nothing friend of mine will say that is of no consequence, that these people, or the larger portion of them, were merely Irish paupers, to him I answer, that the great majority of them were native born citizens of Massachusetts, entitled to every protection that Massachusetts gives to any of her citizens, [applause] and the very largest proportion of them born on this continent. If I am told that, "Oh, these were the old, the infirm, and the sick," I have to say of these 661, 346—more than half—were under five years of age; immortal souls brought into this world and placed in the care of Massachusetts charity, Massachusetts philanthropy; and they have gone to God who gave them, and it is for us to render an account for them."

SENATOR SHERMAN ON THE SITUATION.

A conversation was held by a Herald reporter recently with Senator John Sherman on his views of political matters. In regard to reconstruction, the Senator holds that the question is settled, without further legislation, by the election of General Grant. He believes that specific payment, by increasing the value of greenbacks, should be the objective point of all financial measures. Until Washington is made more accessible by railroads he believes the capital will be removed within five years.

WHAT WE SAID OF RECONSTRUCTION.

In any further discussion of reconstruction I would myself favor the utmost liberality toward the South, would relieve it of all forms of disability provided only it gives protection to the people within, its limits; but if murder for political opinion is to go on as it has, if the spirit of disaffection to laws properly made is to prevail there, the only safety is in the other course. But, as I have said, the subject is not likely to be brought up. Grant's election is a resting place.

UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE.

We must, said the Senator, have universal suffrage as a foundation stone over the whole country, and Congress ought to submit an amendment to the States with that idea.

His financial views are crude, and not worth reproducing. He is a small specie man of a statesman.

Mrs. HARRIET BEECHER STOWE CONSIDERS.—We have from Florida that Mrs. Beecher Stowe, the authoress of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," who a year or two ago bought a place on the St. John's river near Jacksonville, says she wants to live long enough to write another book to correct the mistakes of "Uncle Tom," and show that a great blunder was committed when slavery was abolished. From original condition of sentimental attachment to the negro she has indeed into a state of unmeasurable distress and vexation. She will not have them about her, either in doors or out. She turned them all off her place, and allows no one with a black skin to approach her. We are told that an acquaintance of ours sought to send her a message by a black servant to board a steamboat, but she refused to have the negro to approach her. Her mind, as we have been credibly informed, is very much infatuated against the negro; and this, probably, from comparing their physical and spiritual as labors and services with that of the Northern slaves. Her long picture of the negro has been spoiled, and her sentimental attachment has turned, into aversion, to violent aversion. Like Socrates, through of human sympathy in her bosom, has all turned to coids and whey.—House (Ga.) Telegraph.

"Ain't how duch you like my moustache, Miss Laura?" I piped a dandy to a mucky girl—and very much. It looks like the tail on the back of a caterpillar."
