From the Revolution.

IMPORTANT INTERVIEW WITH CHIEF JUSTICE CHASE.

A. J. Grover, Esq., who furnishes the following interesting and valuable account of a long conversation with Judge Chase, is one of the most respectable and influential members of the bar of Illinois, formerly of Massachusetts. His statements cannot but command the deepest attention in every part of the country.

PETERSBURG, VA., November 24, 1868.

Editors of the Revolution:

I came from Washington to Aquia creek on the same boat and occupied the same seat in the cars yesterday with Chief Justice Chase. Introducing myself as an attorney from Illinois and a member of the bar of his court, I drew him into conversation by interrogations upon a variety of national questions. I found him very talkative indeed, and willing to express his opinions upon most subjects which I introduced. In regard to impeachment, he said Johnson was probably impeachable, and when called to preside over the high court which was to try him he hoped and expected that it would conduct itself in a becoming manner, and with that dignity and judicial decorum which ought always, and had always heretofore, characterized great State trials, but that the Senators occupied their usual seats instead of being seated on the right and left of the presiding judge as the supreme judges and as other senates have done in the trial of impeachments; that Senators did not conduct themselves like judges, but read newspapers, wrote letters, and railed at Johnson as Johnson had railed at the Senate; that they denounced Johnson as the greatest criminal of the age during the trial, when that was the very question which they had sworn impartially to try; that sitting as a Senate they made the rules by which to govern and conduct the trial, when all this should have been deferred until after the organization of the court; that had the trial been conducted with due regard to formalities and usages becoming to grave and reverend Senators sitting as judges in such a case, that whatever had been the judgment rendered, the moral effect would have been favorable. He said that articles might have been drawn under which Johnson would probably have been convicted; that the reason why such articles were not presented was that certain men high in office and in the Republican party were so deep in the mud as Johnson was in the mire; that Mr. Stevens confessed that this was the fact.

In reply to a question, Mr. Chase said that he did not regard Gen. Butler as the object of the impeachment managers; that Butler had great intellectual power, but was a good deal of an Old Bailey lawyer; that Wilson of Iowa or Mr. Bingham were Butler's superiors as sound lawyers and statesmen. He said that he did not believe the stories about the personal dishonesty of Butler; that nothing affecting his personal integrity had ever come to his knowledge while acting as Secretary of the Treasury.

Speaking of General Grant, Mr. Chase said, now you have got your President, what are you going to do with him? I replied, Better inquire "what he is going to do with us?" adding, "Is he in sympathy with the Republican party on negro suffrage?" Mr. Chase said, I don't know any more about General Grant than you do. I do not think he is personally in favor of negro suffrage, but I do not think he will oppose the wishes and acts of the party.—He thought General Grant was a man of great practical judgment in military matters. He did not agree with those who asserted that he was merely a fortunate man. Would take a rebel General for President if he had repented. Sudden conversions, he would admit, were to be distrusted; they might be unlike St. Paul's in every other respect. He preferred the financial part of the Democratic platform to the Republican platform in that respect. Said it would be repudiation to insist upon paying the five-twenties issued under the act of February, 1862, in greenbacks. I told him that I wrote the fourth resolution of the Republican platform, against repudiation. He said that is a good resolution. He said he was opposed to consolidating the national indebtedness into a long loan. Was in favor of paying the debt as quickly as possible, in gold. The people will pay up the debt or repudiate it. If the bonds were to be changed, he was in favor of a short loan.—Did not care whether the new bonds were exempt from taxation or not. It would make no real difference to the people. That taxation would necessarily increase the rate of interest if the bonds remained in the country. Taxation and low interest would drive the bonds out of the country, and thus drain off all the specie. Was in favor of a return to specie payment. No need of diminishing the volume or changing the character of the currency to effect this.

In reply to a question, Mr. Chase said he was glad he was not nominated by the Democrats on the platform which they adopted. He could never have accepted a platform opposed to the rights of the negro. He did not say that he would not like to be President. If he could have done so, he would have been glad to have accepted the Democratic nomination and stopped the crusade of the party against the negro.—This would have been a good thing for the whole country. Being on his way to Richmond to hold Court, I asked him when he expected to try Jeff. Davis. He replied that he did not know when Jeff. Davis would be tried. That the Government had control of Jeff. Davis and was responsible for the delay. That he had always been ready to try him. He did not know why Davis had been allowed to go off to Europe.

I asked the Chief Justice what he thought of the proposed amendment to the Constitution to confer equal suffrage upon the citizens of all the States. He said he had nothing to do with it, but thought it would be as well to leave that matter with the States. I expressed the hope that the word male as well as the word white would be left out of the amendment, if it should be submitted to the States for adoption.—Mr. Chase said it could never pass Congress with the word male left out. He, personally, would be glad to see the experiment of female suffrage fairly tried. I remarked that he was generally supposed to be friendly to the woman's rights movement. He said he certainly had no objections to female suffrage; that all of his instincts were democratic.

Resuming the greenback question, I asked why we could not substitute greenbacks for the national bank currency, and thus save the wastage and the interest on the bonds deposited by the banks? Mr. Chase replied that we must have Banks to circulate the greenbacks, and that the national bank currency was really greenbacks. That he tried hard when the law was before the Committee to have the wastage accrue to the Government, but could not get the Committee to report the bill with such a provision. That he tried to secure the wastage to the Government on the one dollar notes even, but failed in this. He said that so many of the members of Congress were interested in banking that it was impossible to get what he wanted; that no modification of the law curtailing the profits of the national bankers could be passed for the same reason. That many of the Republican leaders and office holders were corrupt and unprincipled men. That he had little confidence in the Republican party for this reason. The masses are honest, but the leaders are bad men. If the party succeeded in conferring suffrage upon the negro, it would probably be the last of its acts for the benefit of the country. The party had been in power so long, bad men largely controlled it. Little can be expected of it in future.

The Chief Justice seems to be very cheerful and happy; not at all sour or morose, as he is represented to be by some of the Republican papers. He appeared strong and vigorous in health, and does not seem to have grown old any during the last twenty years. He reads the finest type without glasses, walks with a brisk and elastic step, jokes and laughs as heartily as when he was twenty years younger. I think he will be able to stand all political disappointments which may be in store for him, such as he underwent in July last, and that he is likely to live long enough to be a candidate for the Presidency several times yet, and that the country is much more likely to get several worse before one better President than Chief Justice Chase would make.

A. J. GROVER.
