JOSIAH TURNER, JR., EDITOR.

From the Hindoo's Recorder, Jan. 11.
MR. HEARTY'S VALUED TUTOR—THE NESTOR OF THE PHRS.

With the present number of the Recorder our connection with it will cease. On taking leave, a slight retrospect of the past may not be inappropriate. It now looks but thirteen months of being half a century since the issue of our first number, during all which period we are not conscious of anything in our political career which needs to be reported—except it be short comments. We commenced the publication in the midst of a perfect calm in politics. Mr. Monroe became President in 1817 with very little opposition, and was re-elected for the second term in 1820 by an unanimous vote. In such quiet times our ambition assumed no higher import than to give the current news of the day, and to fill up our columns with such other articles as we might find calculated to interest and amuse our readers, and perhaps inform and improve the mind. But in 1824 a warm contest was opened for the Presidency, Gen. Jackson, Wm. H. Crawford and John Q. Adams being candidates. Neither of these gentlemen obtained a majority of votes, and the election went to the House of Representatives, by which Mr. Adams was elected. In that election we took a lively interest, because we thought the Whig policy better calculated to promote the best interests of the country, and advance the prosperity and happiness of the people. Mr. Adams was violently and bitterly assailed during the period of his Presidency, though we have thought his administration more pure and practical than any that has succeeded it.

During some of the following years the tariff was the most prominent subject of discussion, and created considerable discontent in the South, though it was felt with but a teacher's weight by the people.

The wisdom of the measure was shown in the rapid increase of home manufacture and the large reduction in prices. As for instance the cotton fabric from Canton, which in 1819 was sold in our cities for fifty cents a yard, was in a few years replaced by a home production of a much superior article at the low price of eight and ten cents. A good article of sugar was retained here at $10 a cent per pound, and coffee at 10 to 12 cents, and other articles in proportion.

The advantages of the tariff were further shown in that, without any apparent tax upon the people, the national debt was rapidly reduced during Mr. Adams' administration, and finally extinguished in the early part of that of Gen. Jackson.

Anthony in 1819, a tariff was advocated by Mr. Garrison for the purpose of encouraging manufacturing establishments at home, and thereby opening a home market for cotton, an important Southern staple, he afterwards opposed it as unconstitutional.

which opposition was urged with so much force that it resulted in the nullification by South Carolina, which was so promptly put down by Gen. Jackson.

From the day when we first knew any thing of politics, we have been accustomed to look upon the perpetuity of the Union as a matter too sacred to be questioned.

The statement uttered by Gen. Washington, in his Farewell Address, was adopted as a guiding sentiment by us on all political questions: "The unity of government which constitutes in us one people is a main pillar in the welfare of our real independence; the support of our tranquility at home, and peace abroad, our safety, our prosperity, and of that liberty which we so highly prize—disowning whatever may suggest a suspicion that it can in any event be abandoned."

It was under the influence of these sentiments that in 1827, when nullification and abolition movements were disturbing the country, and whisperings of disunion began to be uttered, that we held up the warning motto "UNITED WE STAND—DIVIDED WE FALL." And it was under the same influence that in 1844, when the Jingoes began to prevail that Cotton was King, and ambitious men of the South began to be disturbed with visions of a glorious Southern Confederacy, and Secession put on a bold exterior, that we adopted a motto more explicitly expressing our governing principle: UNION, THE CONSTITUTION AND THE LAW—THE GUARDIANS OF OUR LIBERTIES."

Though admitting that the States are of right ought to be sovereign and independent in the management of their internal affairs, yet as a nation we consider it as equally necessary that a general government should have paramount authority in all national affairs, in order to preserve tranquility at home and give it strength to command respect abroad.

Union has ever been our watch word. It was by Union that our liberties were obtained, it is by Union that they can be preserved. It was the United Colonies that declared Independence in 1775; in Union the war of the revolution was fought and independence obtained. It was in Union that the articles of Confederation in 1787 were formed, in which it was twice repeated that the Union shall be perpetual; and it was to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, secure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general welfare and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our prosperity," that the Constitution was framed in 1787. And under this Union, and by the blessings of a kind Providence, the nation acquired a degree of prosperity and happiness unpreceded in the annals of history.

Such has been the Union which all our life time we have been solicitous to preserve. And now, on retiring from our position as editor, may we not entertain a hope that the disasters, disease and ruin which have been spread over our country in the last eight years will be a salutary warning, and that the Union, the Constitution and the Laws—our "guardians of our liberties"—will be the prevailing sentiment and a protecting arm over our country for ages to come? With this prayer upon our heart, having not time or opportunity to say more, we bid our readers "good bye."

GOOD HAIR.—After hairs have been smoked, take them down and thoroughly rub the flesh part with Molasses; then immediately apply ground or powdered pepper, by sprinkling on as much as will stick to the surfaces when dry, then be sure to wash again to dry. Hair dressed in this manner will keep a week, even longer if the man is not very weak.
