JOSEPH TURNER, Jr., EDITOR.

A HARD CASE.—The city of Jefferson, in this State, is suffering all the horrors of martial law—without its being declared—executed by men who take pleasure in presenting its citizens, this odious object being to encourage the killing of the notorious G. W. Smith, for which the citizens generally are to no way responsible.

We have already published Judge Caldwell's stand, giving Smith the worst sort of a character, and containing the Judge's refusal to speak from the same stand with him. The Marshall Republican says the whole career of Smith in Jefferson for several years was "one of violence and unbridled licentiousness." He had lived and cohabited with negroes—walked the principal streets almost in a state of nudity to exhibit his contempt for all decency, and lived otherwise so shamelessly that "not a white radical family in the place would have permitted him to enter their dwelling." He assembled armed bodies of negroes, week after week, and addressed to them the most inflammatory appeals. He guarded the roads with armed negro sentries, and thus made it dangerous to travel them; houses were broken into and robbed by his minions, and the town kept in such a state of alarm that the citizens had to tandem night after night over the property and families. The Republican says:

It can be proved that he told the negroes that they would never be able to govern the town until they burned it; and, it's a sufficient fact, in this connection, that shortly afterwards the town was burned, destroying property to the amount of upwards of a million of dollars. It is in further proof, that when warned by a member of his own party not to return to Jefferson, and who told him that, if he did, and repeated his outrages, he would be killed, he replied that the ladies of Jefferson were his protectors, explaining to the party with whom he was conversing, that he meant, that such was his control over the negroes, and the dread of his power, that the ladies, fearful of a war of races, would not suffer him to be molested. He more than once invited the negroes to violence, and headed negro mobs to rescue negro arrested by civil process. The immediate cause of his death was an affair of the kind. He organized a negro mob to invade the residence of Mr. Richard Fugates, who is now under arrest. A party of peaceable citizens, who went out on patrol duty, to prevent this outrage, were wantonly fired upon by Smith and his negro allies, and two of them seriously wounded. The origin of this difficulty, it will be remembered, was the loss of his carpet sack, which had been taken by some wild boys. For this he organized a body of armed negroes to invade the residence of a private citizen, and attempted assassination of citizens. It is in proof, that he stated that his loss should cost the city of Jefferson five hundred thousand dollars, meaning thereby, clearly, that he intended to burn the town.

This man was a member of the Texas Convention, now in session, and me there who knew his character, and who believe he deserved his fate, are helping to persecute Jefferson, on account of his death.—Garrison, Texas News, Jan. 28th.

JOHN RANDOLPH.
Randolph thus announced his State Right convictions and his sagacity at the same time in his speech on the Missouri bill. He says: "I saw the old State playing what I thought a most ridiculous and perfidious game, and what in the end has proved to be, giving away to the States north of the Ohio immunities and privileges, and making concessions which they must sooner or later rue—which they do at this time, and I then rued, and shall forever rue, over to the day of judgment, where none of us may wish to be, with a stay of execution. I have no design, you may perceive, sir, on the presidency, nor of any other office which is in the presidential gift, or in that of the nation, whose power has increased, is increasing, and will increase, although it might be, and I wish could be diminished. I have preserved in this course, as we say, from the beginning of the last, I say, I must say to the beginning of the family."

That was the key of Mr. Randolph's political system. But the manifest destiny he overthrew him, although it has only established more firmly his theory.

ONE OF THE BEAUTIES.—The arrests of the police have always been arbitrary, but under the workings of the present system the whole machinery amounts to petty tyranny. A few days since a gentleman arrested me on what proved to be a malicious charge. The policeman could do as he pleased with him, but must carry him up to the City Hall. There he found no officer or any one authorized to accept bail. An hour or so was to elapse before the Court met, and this gentleman, who could have given half the property-holders in the city an equality for his appearance at Court, was themselves with confinement in the cell, and had to remain in the guard room in custody for some time. Arraigned before the Court, he was presented with no accusation, and there having been no defense admitted and the evidence to prove one being slight, the charge fell to the ground. He demanded the name of the persons who sent out the warrant, but was denied it. His Honor manifested no disposition to explain or inquire, and that he is without redress. And here is a false imprisonment committed and no one to hold responsible. Gentlemen perfectly competent are imprisoned without trial and denied the right to give bail. It may be called petty tyranny, but the term is too mild. A man may stand with an offence should be presented with his accuser—a cleric a falsely imprisoned and no one to hold responsible.

An Ohio editor is getting particular about what he says. How him? "We are men who merit the better which we bought last week, it is respectfully requested, to exercise more judgment in proportioning the ingredients. The last batch had too much flour in it for butter, and not quite enough for sugar." There is no sense in making yourself bald headed, if butter is thirty-five cents a pound.

The hog cholera prevails in the vicinity of Spartanburg. Many farmers have lost their entire stock.
