JOSIAH TURNER, JR., EDITOR.

EX-PRESIDENT JOHNSON ON GRANT.

Andy has recently given pretty emphatic expression of his views with regard to the man at the other end of the avenue." He does not hesitate to show, in what utter contempt he holds him and his policy.

"I know Grant thoroughly," said he. "I had ample opportunity to study him when I was President, and I am convinced he is the greatest man that was ever thrust upon a people. Why, the little fellow—excuse me for using the expression, but I can't help pitying him—the little fellow has nothing in him. He isn't a single idea. He has no policy, no conception of what the country requires. He don't understand the philosophy of a single great question, and is completely lost in trying to understand his situation. He is menacious,unning and treacherous. He lied to me flagrantly, by—, and I convicted him by my whole Cabinet; but that would have been tolerable were it the only instance, but it was not. He lied on many other occasions. I tell you, sir, Grant is nothing more than a bundle of petty spites, jealousies and resentments. And yet they say Grant is a second Washington. Only think of it, when you compare him with Washington or Jefferson where is he? Why he is so small you must put your finger on him. He is little upstart, a coward, physically and intellectually, to be compared to Washington! Why, it makes me laugh. I have more pity for the man than contempt, for I have no spite against him."

"Grant has nothing. Physically and mentally and morally he is a nonentity. Why, sir, his soul is so small that you could put it within the periphery of a hazel-nut shell and it might float about for a thousand years without knocking against the walls of the shell."

He sits there with his Cabinet. One member has bought him a house in Philadelphia, another has given him $65,000, another has given him a carriage, and so on. It is degrading to the office of President of the United States to have such a man there. They talk about his generalship. Well, he was a mere incident of the war. Men and arms were supplied in abundance, and his forces were so massive that he simply crushed out the rebellion."

"Grant is ruled by a miserable set of bucketers and bondholders. He is in their hands completely, and therefore we are in danger."

The country is in peril for the bondholders are striving to rule the government. The people ought to be made to understand this condition. The people need to be indoctrinated with the truth, and you, gentlemen of the press, do it."

Grant had a wonderfully correct idea of Grant. He used to come to me much at one time and expressed the profoundest contempt for Grant. His estimate of Grant was about the same as my own. He thought Grant could be made to do anything, that he could be made a complete tool and that if he desired he could have himself invited to Grant's house. It happened precisely so, afterward, just as Butler boasted. You remember Butler was invited to Grant's house, and it was brought about by Butler himself. Butler understands Grant thoroughly. I have no hesitation in declaring that Grant is a mean, avaricious, cunning, epithelial man—a complete bundle of petty jealousies, spites and lies. He has no courage. I made him fairly quail before my glance at that Cabinet meeting when I asked him about that famous correspondence concerning Stanton. I asked him question after question, and he quailed. When I finished he stood up, took his hat in his hand, and in a mean, sneaking way, said: "Gentlemen, have you any more questions to ask?" and snuck out of the room. I compelled him of lying and cowardice them.

Such is the gist of a conversation between the ex-President and a correspondent of the Herald. Whether correctly reported or not, we have no doubt that such is Andy's opinion of the Military Agent, and he has a particularly spiteful way of making it known.

With regard to Tennessee, he thinks Senter will be elected, and considers Brownlow's coming round as owing to his desire to be on the winning side.

"You notice," said he, "that he opposes a further proscription. He does this not from principle, but from policy. It is precisely the same way in Virginia, and other Southern States. I tell you, sir, if this country is to be kept from disunion, anarchy of imperialism, the nucleus has to come from the South, when restored. It will be small at first, but mark me, sir, it will come that way. Grant would see this if he had an idea in his head, but he has not."

Mr. Johnson made some serious mistakes when he was in the Presidential chair, but he is about right this time. —Metropolitan Record.

MURDERED PURSUED BY HIS FIC-TIM'S GHOST.

The New Orleans Picayune says: There are new cases of miasma exhibiting such peculiar features as that of Mr. Spencer, living on Locust street, in this city. Some years ago he engaged in a difficulty with a man named Hunt, whom he killed. They had been friends from their boyhood, and up to the day of the fatal affray had never felt for each other but friendship and kindness. It is said of them, too, that they had mutually shamed them by stronger ties than usually cement ordinary friends. But a trifling dispute occurred, and in a moment of impetuous passion the fatal affray was given, and his old friend lay dead at his feet. His horror at the homicide threw him into a fever, of which he died, near dying. For months he hovered on the verge of the grave, and, when he at last recovered, it was with the impression that the ghost of his friend, cast in grave clothes, was ever at his side. His mind, ratiocinative upon every other subject, clings to the delusion, and no persuasion or reason can remove the impression or cure him of the mania. It goes with him to his business, which he conducts with the same sagacity and skill that he ever did. It sits with him in his family circle, is by his side in the street, and lies down with him when he goes to bed at night. He often converses with it, and imagines that he receives replies to his questionings. He says for years the ghost maintained toward him a stern aspect, reflecting all conciliation, but of late years it has seemed toward him a more friendly demeanor. He believes it will go with him through life, as a presence for his crime. The law acquitted him, but this is the judgment of Heaven.
