RAPIDITY OF SENSATION

RAPIDITY OF RENSATION

If a needle be stock into one of the fingers, the sensory fibres takes the impression through the nerve and the posterior root to the spinal cord and thence to the brain. The command goes' out to 'draw the finger away." The mandate travels down the spinal churd to the saterior root and thence through the motor fibres of the nerve to the muscles, which immediately act, and the finger is at once removed. All this takes place with great rapidity, but yet with nothing like the celerity once imagingly. The researches of Helmaholic, a distinguished German physiologist, have shown with great executivele the rate of speed with which the nervous fluid travels; and other observers, among whom Scheliske deserves. which the nervous fluid travels; and other observers, among whom Schelske deserves mention, have given a great deal of time and patience to this and kindred questions.
