SATURDAY, JULY 31, 1869.

From the Philadelphia Ledger.

BABYLON TURNS OUT TO BE THE GARDEN OF EDEN—INTERESTING DISCOVERIES—BABYLONIAN INSCRIPTIONS CONFIRMATORY OF BIBLICAL HISTORY.

There seems to be a reasonable expectation of the discovery of the site of the Garden of Eden, if we may credit Sir Henry Rawlinson, the distinguished Assyrian explorer, and President of the Royal Asiatic Society. At a meeting of that Society held in London on the 21st of May, at which he was inaugurated, he made a speech, in which he expressed his conviction that the Babylonian writings and monuments now in the possession of the British Museum would turn out to be intimately connected with the earliest Biblical writings, and that before long the whole of the early history given in the Book of Genesis, from the time of Abraham downward, would be found existing in its original form among the cuneiform stone records. He also announced that in a short time he should submit to the Society evidence that the name "Garden of Eden" was the old and natural name of Babylon.

He stated that there were Babylonian documents which gave an exact geographical description of that Paradise in which the opening scene of human history is laid, answering exactly to the topography and the geodesical particulars of Holy Writ. In them he found the four rivers, or rather the four branches of "the river which went out of Eden to water the garden," mentioned by the very same names—Pison, Gihon, Hiddekel and Euphrates. He has also met with accounts of the flood and the building of the Tower of Babel, which bear with singular directness and value upon the Biblical narrative of those events. If he should realize all he anticipates he will have given to the world one of the most interesting archæological and antiquarian discoveries ever made.

Among Biblical critics it has long been a matter of discussion whence came the two different accounts of the creation of the world, of man, and of his history from his emanation from the hands of his Creator down to his destruction by the deluge, which form the first nine chapters of Genesis. The two narratives have been distinguished respectively as the Jehovah and the Elohim records, because in the one the Jehovah is spoken of as Jehovah, and in the other in the plural form as Elohim.—Probably Sir Henry Rawlinson's discoveries will throw light on the subject, and thus clear up the obscurity which hangs over that portion of the sacred text. It this should be the case, he will be a benefactor to theology and Biblical lore as well as to history and archæology.

There is nothing amazing in the fact that the sculptured archives of Babylonia, necessarily the chief memorial of tradition and belief among the Chaldeans, should be reflected in the annals of a race which came forth from Chaldea; still, the prospect of comparing the original's with the derived reports, and of finding the authentic sources from which Elohist and Jehovist drew their statements, is one which will naturally excite vivid expectations among Biblical scholars, and cannot fail to arouse very general curiosity. The cause of religion has always been advanced by discoveries in science, notwithstanding the outcries made against them by well meaning but rather short-sighted persons.

Truth can never gainsay truth; nor can we go back to the practice, whether political or religious, which is said to have laid hands on Galileo for asserting that the earth moved. "Nevertheless it moves" is true of everything as well as of the planet we live on; and if these new discoveries, or any others, interpret to us, in a positive and simple sense, legends which have been lost in the sacred list of tradition, the Biblical account cannot but gain in clearness, while the intent which dictated the record must be carried out with increased directness and force.

The character of all such investigations has ever been in the highest sense scriptural and Christian. It may turn out that the Chaldeans had traditions of Eden, of the flood, and of Babel, and that Abraham brought them from "Ur of the Chaldees" to Canaan, and handed them down to his posterity; and these traditions may also have found their way into other lands long before Abraham's time which would partly account for their universality. Let us, at any rate, know what the Babylonian records can tell about the Garden of Eden.—If Hiddekel, Pison, and Gihon, can be identified without geographical bewilderment, let it by all means be done. We have our doubts about the probability of this.

Euphrates remains, but it seems strange that the three other rivers should have disappeared so completely in a country where no natural convulsions have taken place within recorded history. Neither the heat nor the sand have been able to obliterate the Euphrates, and it is difficult to imagine that they could have obliterated the others unless they were insignificant streams. But the turn which Sir Henry Rawlinson has given to the meaning of the term "Garden of Eden" throws light on that passage in Isaiah (chap. 37, v. 12) "Have the gods of the nations delivered them which my fathers have destroyed, as Gozan, and Haran, and Reseph, and the children of Eden which were in Telassar?" And on that in Ezekiel (chap. 28, v. 13,) "Thou hast been in Eden, the garden of God."

RADICAL ESTIMATE OF SOLDIERS.

The leading "loyal" newspaper of New York city, under the head of "No Change," gives utterance to the following:

"A friend of Gen. F. P. Blair has revived a letter, written by that gentleman in 1865, to show that his respect for the confederate heroes, which he manifested so offensively at the Long Branch banquet, is no new thing, but a feeling which he has always cherished. The letter in question is one introducing a clergyman who proposed erecting a monumental cathedral in honor of the Confederate dead, and Mr. Blair saw 'nothing to disapprove, but much to admire, in this effort to consecrate [commemorate?] their virtues of constancy and courage.'"

It is not necessary to defend the courage or loyalty of General Blair against the venomous attacks of stay-at-home poltroons like Greeley, and other radical editors—including the entire lot in Chicago, not one of whom ever saw the flash of a Confederate's gun. His records as a skillful leader and daring soldier is proved by the history of scores of battles. He is beyond reach of radicals like Greeley, who, in 1861, instigated the South to secession, and who, in 1869, have no words sufficiently vile to express their hatred of the men who followed their advice, or of gallant union soldiers who do not join them in their crusade against the very memory of the men who fought for secession.

This persistent abuse of Blair for having the temerity to assert that the men whom we fought are not cowards, is exceedingly contemptible, and undeserving of notice save as indicative of party spirit, and of a curious tendency in the opinions of the men in power. This tendency is something which seems to have for its object the repression of many of the more gallant men who fought for the suppression of the war, and the bringing forward of a class of men who had no connection whatever—save as demagogues and politicians—with the war for the union. One sees, to-day, in the awards of honor by the ruling party, the ignoring of such men as Meade, Slocum, Warren, Thomas, McClellan, Hancock and many others. Among the list of fortunate ones, we see such men as Butler, Banks, Cochrane, Sprouls, Sickles, and others, of whom some were in the army but a few months, while of the others not one ever performed a deed that entitles him to a single preferment. It is true that Sherman was promoted to the vacancy caused by Grant's election to the Presidency; but this was something which could not have well been avoided.

Where will this disposition to ignore the real heroes of the war end? No man who fought the Confederates, who is a soldier at heart, and who can appreciate the existence of courage and genius in a foe, will consent to ally himself with a party which insists, as a cardinal principle of its faith, upon hatred and detraction of the men who fought in the Confederate armies. Every true soldier has an admiration of a foe who displays the qualities of courage and tenacity. No such man will belittle the foe with whom he has let by been interlocked in deadly combat, for the reason that his soul rebels against such meanness, and for the further reason that all depreciation of the man whom one has conquered is just so much a depreciation of oneself. From this state of things, it has resulted that a majority of those men whose efforts were prominent in behalf of the Union are not in sympathy with radicalism. They cannot act with that party without self-stultification. They must, if they join that party, immediately charge themselves with cowardice, by being always ready to charge that quality upon their late enemy. If they wish to affiliate with the Greeleys, and Colfaxes, and Wades, they must ceaselessly charge incompetency upon the men whom to conquer required some four years of fighting. To assert to the contrary will draw upon the man who does it the hisses and disapprobation of his listeners, and the maledictions of the radical press. No soldier can become a radical in good standing until he subscribes to the following confession of faith:

"I do hereby solemnly acknowledge myself to be a coward and an incompetent soldier, in that, with all the superiority of forces on our side, we were unable to conquer the craven hearted Confederates of the South in less than four years. I believe all Southern soldiers to have been the veriest sneaks in existence, and I hereby pledge myself so to assert on all occasions, despite the fact that, every time I belittle my enemy, I proportionately belittle my own efforts against him. To all of which I pledge myself, my children, and children's children, so help me John Brown; and to the security of this, my promise, I pledge my hopes of office."—Chicago Times.

not equaled in the State of Virginia, embracing every article needed by Virginia and North Carolina Merchants, all of which we intend to sell at

GUARANTEED BALTIMORE PRICES

We ask of our friends, and the WHOLESALE TRADE, generally, an examination of our stock and prices. We are confident we can save time and expense to merchants by buying of us this season.

One of our firm will remain in New York during the entire season, and we will therefore be in constant receipt of new goods bought at auction, of Manufacturers and Importers.

Copartnership.

I HAVE, THIS DAY associated with me my son, JOHN S. PESCUD, and the firm business hereafter will be conducted under the firm of

P. F. PESCUD & SON.

The CASH PLAN will as strictly observed. We must have the cash or an equivalent, on delivery of goods.

The Senior partner returns his thanks to his friends, and the public generally, for their generous support for the past 20 years, and hopes it will be continued to the new firm, who will use their utmost exertions to merit and share increased patronage.

All indebted will please pay up this month, as my old business must be closed speedily.
